Hospital Intern Group Becomes a Trade Union

About 100 residents and interns at St. Paul's Hospital in Vancouver have been granted certification as a trade union and similar certifications are expected at Victoria's two general hospitals.

The ruling by the B.C. Labor Relations Board Thursday, a first in North America, means the student doctors, formerly represented by the Professional Association of Residents and Interns, are now employees of the hospital as well as students.

Their bargaining unit will be able to negotiate salaries and hours of work.

Mike O'Brien, director of employee relations at Victoria General Hospital, said today he anticipates that the separate certification bids made by PARI at each of the province's six teaching hospitals will all likely be approved by the LRB.

In view of the protracted strikes by residents and interns in Britain over such issues as hours of work, O'Brien said he anticipates the landmark ruling by the LRB will likely mean more difficult bargaining lies ahead for the hospitals.

There are about 18 interns and four residents at Jubilee and 10 interns at Victoria General. Other teaching hospitals are Vancouver General, Royal Columbian and Shaughnessy.

There are about 500 members of PARI in B.C. and until recent changes in the Labor Code they could not be recognized as a union and were prohibited from striking. Despite this they conducted a 10-day unofficial strike in March of 1975, hooking off sick.

Heating Oil, Gas Goes Up

OTTAWA (CP) — The price for a gallon of gasoline or home-heating oil will increase by up to a half-cent more than earlier expected as a result of a change July 1 in wellhead prices for crude oil.

Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie had said in May in announcing a $1.05 a barrel crude oil price increase that it would mean an additional 3.8 cents in higher prices for consumers.

But a formal notice Thursday to oil companies indicates they can increase prices by up to 4.3 cents a gallon when a freeze on consumer prices ends Aug. 30.

A departmental official said the half-cent difference resulted from an adjustment in wellhead prices in Alberta to Alberta and changes in pipeline tariffs for Interprovincial Pipeline Ltd., the company that moves all western oil used in eastern provinces.

The minister's notice to the companies said an increase of two-tenths of a cent will be allowed to reflect the price adjustments in Alberta.

Under the oil price agreement, the province had been given an average price for its oil of $8 a barrel, rising to $9.05 on July 1.

Lockheed Arrest More Expected

TOKYO (UPI) — Police today arrested a sixth top executive of All Nippon Airways and were reportedly ready to charge prominent politicians also allegedly implicated in the $12 million Lockheed bribery scandal.

O'Brien said PARI initially applied for a blanket certification at all the teaching hospitals last August but then withdrew it on a technicality and made separate applications at each of the teaching hospitals. The board ruling on the St. Paul's application is the first.

He said hospitals have resisted the association being recognized as a union because interns and residents are both students and employees and it is impossible to divide the functions.

ARMED CLASH FEARED

Forces On Alert In Kenya, Uganda

ADDIS ABABA — The armed forces of both Kenya and Uganda were reported Thursday to be on high alert as fears grew that the two neighboring countries might be heading for an armed confrontation.

Kenyan and western diplomatic sources also reported that 20 French-built Mirage jet fighters flew into Uganda early Wednesday morning from Libya and that as many as 20 more might be on the way.

The arrival of the Libyan aircraft raised deep concern throughout East Africa that Ugandan President Idi Amin was preparing a strike against Kenya in retaliation for its alleged involvement in the Israeli raid on Uganda's Entebbe Airport last weekend.

President Amin has often engaged in provocative posturing and sabre rattling in past crises with his neighbors without finally taking any armed action against them.

However, this is by far the worst crisis yet in Uganda-Kenya relations and Amin is visibly still smarting from the humiliation dealt to his army by the Israelis.

The heightened tension between the two hostile neighboring countries comes on the eve of a special United Nations Security Council debate on the Israeli "aggression" against Uganda.

The Kenyan government government Thursday launched a scathing verbal attack on the person and regime of President Amin calling him a "dictatorial fascist ruler" and describing him as "erratic, unpredictable and without any sense of direction."

Meanwhile, British High Commissioner James Hennessy met Amin today to discuss the case of Dora Bloch, left behind when Israelis raided Entebbe airport.

Mrs. Bloch, 74, who holds both British and Israeli citizenship, was left behind in a hospital when the Israeli rescue mission took place. She has not been seen since Sunday. There were fears for her safety following her apparent disappearance from a private ward in the Mulago hospital.

The margin in a free vote where numbers are not required to follow party lines, was considerably wider than the 133-125 vote which gave the legislation approval in principle three weeks ago.

One amendment, providing that second time murderers automatically be charged with first-degree murder, was supported by the government and passed.

All amendments calling for retention of the death penalty for specific crimes were opposed by the government, and were defeated easily.

The closest count came on an amendment that would have retained the death penalty for murder of police officers or prison guards — in effect the law is in effect today. It was defeated 132 to 117, a margin of 15 votes compared with the eight-point difference that the abolition bill received on second reading.

Amendments that would have retained the death penalty for piracy, including air piracy or skyjacking, were defeated by about a count of 153 to 97.

An amendment that would have retained the death penalty for acts of treason was defeated 143 to 107.

OTTAWA — Legislation to abolish the death penalty in Canada easily cleared several hurdles last night and appears likely to receive final Commons approval next Tuesday.

Three executions are scheduled for next Thursday.

Abolitionists easily defeated 13 amendments, some of which would have retained the death penalty for crimes such as treason or piracy.

CLRA Rejects as Tactic Union Back-on-Job Plan

Construction trade unions on Vancouver Island offered today to resume work during the province-wide lockout to complete construction on top priority schools and hospitals.

But the concession was quickly rejected by the Construction Labor Relations Association.

CLRA president George Wheaton today said the offer was a union tactic aimed at destroying the effectiveness of the lockout.

The B.C. government will appeal a Canadian Transport Commission ruling that Alberta is within its rights to move the head office and overhaul base of Pacific Western Airlines to Alberta, Attorney-General Garde Gardom said today.

Gardom said the province will also seek an injunction restraining PWA from starting the move from Vancouver until the outcome of the appeal is known.

The appeal will be made to the CTC Review Committee which has the power to review all rulings made by the CTC.

The attorney-general said other avenues are still open to the province, such as an appeal to the federal court or the federal cabinet and these areas have not been "foreclosed."

He said an order-in-council, passed by the former NDP administration, gives the health minister the power to suspend if necessary the practice of medicine.

Provincially fees for abortions, effective April 1, are $60.05 for pregnancies of up to 12 weeks gestation and $120.10 for those beyond 12 weeks.

Dennis Cocke said Wednesday he found it "bloody incredible" that doctors in Surrey who charge fees of $65 per abortion on top of the normal $150 fee charged against the B.C. Medical Plan.

Cocke said the order-in-council was brought in to stop extra billing for operations such as vasectomy, tubal ligation and abortion.

He said the practice was becoming increasingly common prior to the order.

Provincially fees for abortions, effective April 1, are $60.05 for pregnancies of up to 12 weeks gestation and $120.10 for those beyond 12 weeks.

However, Peggy Lenti, coordinator of the Whalley family planning clinic, said earlier in an effort to get evidence of possible fraud.

The statement drew shouts of protest from many of the 250 salesmen attending the quarterly meeting of the Victoria Society of Real Estate Salesmen at The Old Forge.

Some of the salesmen shouted that such forms of deliberate entrapment should be declared illegal.

Watts said the question of whether police entrapment is legal has not yet been determined by the courts. Therefore investigators will use those tactics on real estate salesmen in Victoria.

He said that under new anti-combines legislation that took effect July 1, people in the real estate industry face fines of up to $1 million and prison terms of as long as five years for major violations.

Anyone found guilty will have a criminal record, he warned, and the new laws are very tough.

The main problem for real estate salesmen will be a close scrutiny of advertisements to assure there is nothing misleading or inaccurate.

It has become a criminal offence to deliberately or inadvertently mislead a home buyer.

The laws were brought in as part of the consumer protection campaign of the federal government and how severely the real estate industry will be affected will not be certain until there have been tests in the courts.

There was need of some consumer protection but the new laws potentially are so severe many salesmen could get criminal records without intending to mislead anyone.

Watts said.

To protect themselves, salesmen must be extremely careful in wording their advertisements in future.

But Ms. Lenti said the extra fees are being imposed by doctors for other reasons.

"The doctors claim it's because they do counselling before each abortion — like talking to a girl to make sure she wants to go ahead with it.

"But when you talk to these doctors they say things like 'well, these girls have got to be taught a lesson.'

Sex Life Your Own!

It turns out that clients of the Worker's Compensation Board don't have to discuss matters like spiders, their sex life or tall women unless they want to.

A spokesman for Labor Minister Allan Williams said today the WCB has been told that a psychological questionnaire condemned by Victoria Labor Council, can only be used if individuals are warned beforehand some of the questions involve their personal privacy.

The spokesman said the policy calls for the test to be taken only on a voluntary basis and that an individual may refuse without prejudice to his claim compensation.

Williams, he said, had asked the Human Rights Commission for an opinion of the questionnaire and was told it could in some instances be construed as a violation of an individual's privacy rights.

The panel directive was given to the WCB prior to the protest by the Victoria labor body, the spokesman said.

Moslem Martyrs Cited

BEIRUT (UPI) — Christian forces routed leftist gunmen from two northern mountain towns today but said the retreating forces massacred unarmed civilians in the town of Chekka and left their bodies sprawled in the streets.

The leftists countered with charges of widespread atrocities by the Christians, saying Moslem civilians were "martyred" in four days of fighting along the northern coastline.

The death toll in fighting throughout Lebanon soared to nearly 600 by Thursday evening — the largest single death toll in 15 months of civil war.

The fighting left Christians in control of Chekka, 41 miles north of Beirut, and Anoun, the leftist stronghold nine miles inland.

"Now that we have liberated the (northern) district, we are ready to resume liberating the remainder of Lebanon from the aliens and invaders," said Tony Franjeh, and rightists militia commander and son of James-duck President Suleiman Franjeh.

A leftist-Palestinian force overran Chekka earlier this week to avenge the rightist siege of the Tal Zatar refugee camp, now in its 19th day.

The returning Christians, pouring into the mountain town today, said the leftists had committed atrocities in Chekka "which surpassed Nazi crimes."

Arab attempts to halt the fighting collapsed as Libya's Premier Abdel Salam Jalloud Thursday followed Arab League Secretary General Mahmoud Riad in leaving Beirut for Damascus.

But a left-wing radio station said Jalloud had received a Syrian pledge to start withdrawing troops to the eastern Bekaa Valley and northern Akkar region today and complete the pullback in 48 hours.

CLRA Rejects Proposal

in the Gordon Head area will be without a school to go to in September.

School board officials were making contingency plans for students slated to attend Lambir junior secondary and Torquay elementary, two Gordon Head schools nearing completion before the lockout.

Wiens said today three or four weeks would be needed to complete the schools. He welcomed the trades concession and said negotiations would be started with CLRA on whether construction could resume.

In Sooke, highest priority is being given to construction of Spencer Road School, scheduled to open in the fall and handle 1,000 students.

Schibili said the unions "wouldn't make the same concessions to any commercial project, but the social services, schools and hospitals are important. And people tend to say 'those damn unions are holding up the schools.'

Schibili, also chairman of the Victoria Labor Council, said the same offer would be made for the construction of a hospital in Cumberland.

"Now it's up to the school board to go to the contractors and see if it's okay — if they want us in on their discussions, fine."

But Wheaton said the inconvenience of a delay in school construction has to be weighed against the cost of having 40,000 construction workers off the job and $2 billion projects being held up across B.C.

On the negotiation front there was no activity today as chief negotiator Chuck McVeigh withdrew from the talks until the unions can agree among themselves on a basis for re-opening the discussions.

Wheaton said the CLRA is caught between the rival demands of the unions.

"No matter which way we move, some union is going to strike so it is a hopeless situation," Wheaton said.

He said the CLRA is one. The test is whether it can be proved that it is cheaper than similar houses for sale.

A roof cannot be advertised as new if it is 18 months old.

The house should not be described as near schools and shopping. It should be precise as in: three blocks from school and four blocks from stores.

An advertisement seeking listings cannot say cash buyers are waiting if none are.

Real estate agents (employers) also will come under strict regulation.

If agents are convicted of an agreement between companies to make identical commission bids on a house they can be fined as much as $1 million. The maximum prison term for a second offence is five years.

In a short business meeting before the speech, society president Audrey Grimshaw announced the new post-licensing course for salesmen will begin at Camosun College in September.

Membership chairman Joe Blodgett presented a $500 cheque to the George Pearkes clinic on behalf of the real estate salesmen. It was accepted by Norman Pass, chairman of the clinic's board of directors.

3rd Boat Quits Maui Race

A third boat has dropped out of the Victoria-Maui race. David Mills' Gometra of the Royal Naval Sailing Association in Vancouver reported "minor technical difficulties" on Thursday and is now on her way to Neah Bay, near the mouth of the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

A U.S. coast guard vessel rendezvoused with Bill Nelson's P'Zazz of Tacoma shortly after midnight and has her under tow to Oregon. P'Zazz was dismasted in stormy conditions on Wednesday.

Bill King's Thunder of the Portland Yacht Club withdrew after developing electrical problems and is on her way home.

Bill Niemi's Joli of Seattle continues to lead the remaining fleet. She clocked 250 miles Thursday and reported her position to be some 1,400 miles from Maui.

Her sister ship, Jacob Wood's Sorcery of the Lahaina Yacht Club was in second position, 165 miles behind Joli.

In third position and 205 miles behind the leader was Per Christoffersen's Terna III of the West Vancouver Yacht Club.

Five miles behind were Paul McCullough's Race Passage of Bremerton and Doug Fryer's Ragtime from Seattle. Next were John Long's Trumpeter of Jericho from the Royal Vancouver Yacht Club and Norman Elliott's Orango-Tang from the Kitsilano Yacht Club.

Victoria's only entry in the 2,308-mile race, Al Nelson's Lucifer of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club, was reported to be in eighth position, 270 miles behind Joli.

'Power Play' Firing Nets $4,000

By DEREK SIDENIUS

An arbitration board has ordered the city of Victoria to pay $4,000 to a former employee whose job as bylaw inspector was summarily terminated on May 9, 1975.

And members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 388, representing city hall inside workers consider the ruling an important victory in protecting the jobs of all permanent employees with the city.

The board declared the dismissal of Lawrence Bellman unlawful because the city, after terminating the position of bylaw inspector, failed to offer him other employment.

The order was handed down by the three-man board last Saturday but was not announced until Thursday.

Only chairman Jean Mohart and union appointee Edward McAllister signed the report. James Carfrae, the city appointee, dissented and is expected to submit a minority report.

The hearing began last Nov. 6 but was adjourned to March 5 at the request of the union which wished to retain legal counsel. Victoria lawyer Dr. J. J. Gow appeared for the union while R. J. Taylor represented the city.

There was little dispute on the facts of the case. In 1973 the city decided to consolidate its bylaw enforcement into one position.

Bellman, a former civic worker at Edmonton, applied, was successful, and started his duties as a probationary employee on April 16, 1974.

Three months later he was made a permanent employee on the recommendation of his supervisor, city solicitor J. S. de Villiers.

The board noted Bellman carried out his duties able but because of an internal "power play" involving the heads of city hall departments, he wasn't given enough work to do.

"This was in spite of his being hired for a position that, according to the evidence we heard, was sorely needed for some time," the arbitrators said.

"We have to concede that whether by individuals or in concert, the bylaw inspector's job was an object of nihilism."

Bellman returned to work on May 5, 1975, following the three-month civic labor dispute, and four days later, was summoned to the personnel office and handed a letter advising him his employment had been terminated forthwith on the grounds the position was redundant.

Victoria Hydro Strike 'Soon'

Selective strike action against B.C. Hydro escalated today when office employees stayed off the job at the central interior office at Merritt and construction site just north of there.

A spokesman for the Office and Technical Employees Union said that although it is "quite probable" the strike action will affect the Victoria area soon, it likely won't be until next week.

Thursday four pickets appeared at a Hydro warehouse and supply yard in Richmond and 30 workers, mainly members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, left their jobs when pickets arrived.

Fred Trotter, president of Local 378 of the union, representing about 3,500 workers at Hydro, said the picket line is part of the OTEU campaign of escalation in support of wage demands.

Fifty-three day-punch operators walked off the job Tuesday and were joined Wednesday by 33 meter readers. Hydro employs about 12,000 persons.

Shark Bites Boy In Bed

SEATTLE (UPI) — A white shark bit an 8-year-old Seattle boy Thursday while he was resting in bed and the wound required 16 stitches to close.

How come?

The jaws of the shark, which was caught three months ago, were mounted on a board hanging on the bedroom wall of Everett Johnson III.

His older half-brother, Gary Sykes, 29, walked into the bedroom and accidentally hit the mounted jaws with his shoulder.

The board sailed through the air and landed on Everett's leg, digging the teeth into the boy's calf.

"It took me about two minutes to pull those teeth from his leg," Gary said. "They stuck like fishhooks."

"This is my first shark-bite case," said the doctor who stitched up Everett's wound in the emergency room of the hospital.

The boy's father, Everett Johnson Jr., a crew member of the U.S. Coast and Geodetic survey ship Oceanographer, caught two sharks last April near Hawaii and mounted the jaws for his son.

"All evidence produced at the hearing gave the picture of a capable and willing employee suffering very poor treatment both by his peers and by management that appeared to accept insubordination.

"Authority at the particular time in City Hall seems to have been a mixed bag with the bylaw inspectors job caught in a power play," the arbitrators declared.

The compensatory award was calculated by subtracting the amount Bellman received in severance pay and insurance benefits from what he would have earned if his employment with the city had continued.

Rick Doyle, vice-president of the CUPE local said on Thursday the money wasn't the important issue.

Rather, he said, it was the principle of job security.

Doyle said Bellman has no interest in returning to work for the city.

Man's Body Identified

RCMP positively identified the body of Wilbur Willard, 46, of Seattle Thursday, more than a month after he went missing during the Swiftsure yacht race.

The body was washed ashore near Sooke June 25 and police had been seeking means of identifying the man, including dental charts from Washington State.

Man, 66, Sailing Top of World

Washington Post

TROMSOE, Norway — A 66-year-old retired New York stockbroker is trying to sail 3,200 miles across the top of the world in a 41-foot sailboat, and the Soviet Union wants him to turn back.

It is the second time that Walter Levering is making the attempt: Last year Norwegian authorities persuaded him to suspend his effort because he had started too late to avoid hazardous ice.

Again this year the Soviets say that Levering and his Norwegian shipmate, shipbuilder Norvald Ulvik, who were last reported to be near Vaygach Island, at the southern tip of Novaya Zemlya, are in danger from ice and should abandon their plan to sail the northern sea route to Point Barrow, Alaska.

But Norwegian press accounts, pointing out that the region—well above the Arctic Circle—is a period of 24-hour daylight, hint that the Soviets' real reason for wanting Levering to drop his project is strategic.

They quote Norwegian weather stations as saying that the water between Novaya Zemlya and the Soviet mainland is free of ice, and say that Levering's course leads through waters the Soviet navy regards as of great strategic value.

The Northeast Passage was first travelled in 1878-1879 by A. E. Nordenskiold in the Swedish ship Vega, and the Soviet icebreaker Sibiryakov completed the passage in one season in 1932.

Levering's boat is equipped with a radio, radar and a 20-horsepower motor of which he said he will use only in case of emergency.

Repeated messages from Norwegian coastal radio and from Soviet radio stations in Murmansk have drawn no response.

HUSSEIN HUDDLE IN SAUDI ARABIA

AMMAN (WP) — King Hussein of Jordan has returned from a two-day visit with King Khalid of Saudi Arabia that may have eased the way for Jordan's purchase of U.S.

Jordanian Information Minister Salah Aeu Zeid said in an interview that King Hussein's Saudi visit was "really fruitful and successful."

Zeid said financing of Jordan's planned purchase of a missile defence system was discussed by the two kings and their advisers, including their respective defence chiefs.

Drinking and Driving

Alcohol is the single largest cause of death in motor vehicle accidents in British Columbia. This stark fact is behind the news that provincial prosecutors are going to ask for much stiffer penalties for drinking drivers.

Motorists refuse to learn by example, persuasion or experience—so coercion is the last resort. A case in point is seat belt use. In close to three-quarters of fatal traffic accidents, seat belts were not buckled up, which demonstrates the waste of money involved in all the fancy ad campaigns designed to get drivers and passengers to do themselves a favor.

So we favor anything which can help save lives. Seven hundred and seventeen persons met death on the highways in 1975 in B.C., down somewhat from the 1974 total of 844 killed. Both figures are unacceptable. If that many people died at once in the sinking of a ferry or the mid-air collision of two jumbo jets, the cries to do something would be deafening.

The tragedy would be seared into our minds indelibly.

If the get-tough attitude in the courts produces significant reductions, we will all rejoice. But we remain skeptical, especially about the effect of higher fines.

Judges now may impose a maximum $2,000 fine for impaired driving; previous to criminal code amendments proclaimed April 26 it was $500. Outgoing B.C. legal aid director Frank Maczko points out that higher fines will hit the ordinary guy hardest.

Hit with a $2,000 fine, the average workingman will go to jail. The well-off among us will pay up—and keep on driving.

Maczko noted that Canada's experience with progressively higher fines is that they temporarily reduce impaired driving, but are soon followed by increases in offences. For example, Canada once had a maximum fine of $150. That was raised to $500. Will the deterrent effect of $2,000 also wear off eventually? With that disclaimer, generally the Times supports lengthier licence suspensions, even jail terms and heavy fines, if they can be proved effective.

But all of these are measures after the fact. True, there must come some saturation point at which heavier and heavier penalties produce significant decreases, or so we hope. What seems needed in the worst way is something aimed at prevention.

Raising the legal driving age (those 16 to 19 accounted for 165 deaths last year), making qualified defensive driving courses mandatory to obtain a licence (and to get a licence back after suspension), setting up more police roadblocks outside the traditional year-end holiday season, allowing the establishment of more neighborhood pubs so people can walk—not drive—for a glass of refreshment in combination might be equally or more effective.

The Murky Seabed

Ottawa would be foolish not to appeal a B.C. appeals court decision giving the provincial government ownership of the sea bottom between the mainland and Vancouver Island. The simple fact that the court split three to two in favor of B.C.'s claim raises doubts. It is almost unthinkable that a constitutional question of this gravity would not go to the supreme court.

To date there has been little development of offshore Canadian seabeds. Yet drilling in the Beaufort Sea is only a precursor to developments that will probably affect the coastal waters of the Maritime provinces, Hudson Bay and Arctic Island waters. In the case of Hudson Bay, for example, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec would all be vying for jurisdiction, plus the federal government. While the B.C. decision established rights of proprietorship it ignored jurisdiction over resources—a sore point between Ottawa and the provinces even now.

The federal government has stated it wants a cut of revenues accruing from off shore resources to go to neighboring province. But an undetermined amount—probably the lion's share—would be distributed to the country as a whole through Ottawa. The provinces, of course, feel they should get everything from offshore development bordering their jurisdictions. Considering the debilitating federal-provincial battles over resource taxation in recent years, it would be wise to have a definitive foundation in place before we start digging the seabed shelter.

The only recourse in a case potentially fraught with endless haggling is to drop it in the supreme court's lap.

That would decide the issue for the whole country, once and for all.

W. A. WILSON

Choices to Make by 1978

OTTAWA — The opinion polls continue to show the government's loss of public esteem and there is now little doubt that if there were an early election Prime Minister Trudeau and the Liberals would be defeated.

An election, however, is still two years away on any normal schedule and there is no reason why Trudeau would want one at some earlier date. Is it possible for the Liberals to regenerate themselves in those intervening two years? Or must they go out of office for a time in order to recover some political vitality?

No one can answer those questions with full assurance but it seems to me very likely that if the Conservatives conduct themselves sensibly between now and the next election they will win. That is probably not the conventional wisdom of this capital, however, because there are many politicians and observers here who are convinced that Joe Clark is out of his league in confronting Pierre Trudeau.

It is perfectly true that Clark leaves the impression of being a more ordinary sort of person than Trudeau and if the Canadian people were voting on the two men's intellectual capacities they would give the edge to the prime minister.

No More Drive

There is an old political saying, however, that governments are never destroyed by their opponents but by themselves. They make mistakes. They grow weary and uninspired. The public senses that some vital drive is not there and the day comes when even a long-established regime is pushed aside. That is the situation and the prospect facing the Liberal party at the present time.

Along with the common view that Clark is no match for Trudeau, there is however another piece of conventional wisdom here these days. It is that the prime minister can—if he possesses the will—carry out such an extensive cabinet shuffle this summer that his government will take on both a new look and a new vitality. Then, so the theory goes, a prime minister with an edge will lead a party with an edge and the Liberals will, as usual, turn back the Conservatives.

The Liberals have able backbenchers and it is not difficult to list half a dozen or so who seem to have as good qualifications for cabinet positions as many present ministers. Their faces would certainly be new but it is doubtful that five or six newly promoted backbenchers are really going to give the Trudeau government the life it needs with the public if it is to survive the next election.

IONA CAMPAGNOLO
... would she change cabinet?

Abbott and Ed Lumley. He would be applauded for doing so and the government probably would gain a little political goodwill. Nonetheless, the power centres of the government would be remarkably little changed. Real power would continue in the hands of Jean Chretien, Otto Lang, Marc Lalonde and Donald Macdonald. Bryce Mackay has the ability to appeal to a wide range of ordinary Canadians rather than major power within the cabinet and his position would be unaffected.

It is hard to see in that picture anything that could reasonably overcome the Liberals' lost popularity with the public. The latest Gallup poll shows that 47 per cent disapprove of the way they are governing the country against only 27 per cent who think a good job is being done.

This is a significantly higher level of disapproval than normal and it supports the results from other polls which show that fewer than one third of voters feel they would support the Liberals in another election.

Liberal recovery, if it takes place at all during the next two years, must involve more than just some new cabinet faces. It demands primarily greater political clarity from the party, the ability to convey a sense of purpose to the public. This is precisely what the prime minister has not been able to do. His famous broadcasts last winter, far from producing clarity, brought increased confusion about the party's intentions and its place in the political spectrum. Although an opposing party can afford a good deal of vagueness, a governing party needs a more precise political place—people inevitably insist on knowing what it stands for.

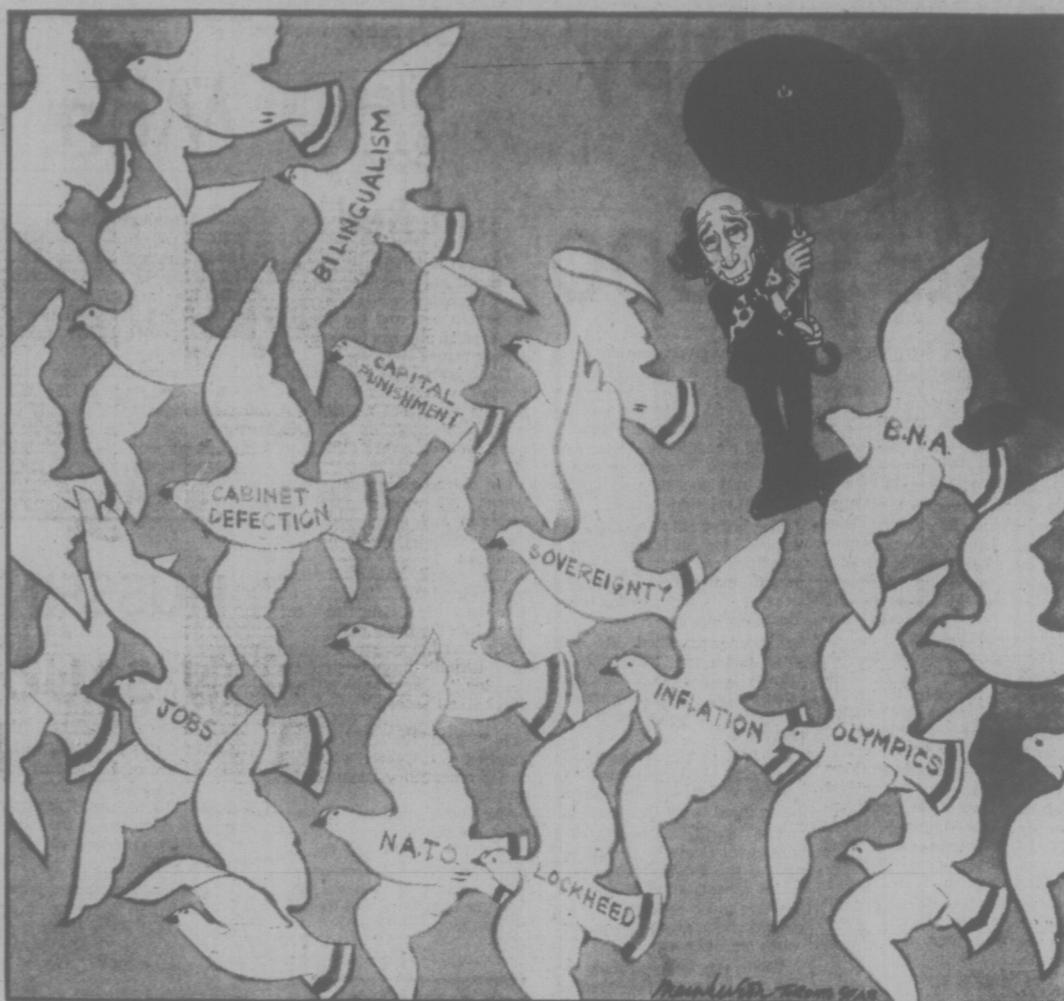

This country faces some identifiable problems and much of any government's energies would go into dealing with them—continuing economic weakness, the thorny relationship between the two main Canadian communities, dwindling energy sources and so on. Beyond this, however, there will be some areas of choice for whatever party is in power after the next election.

More Welfare State?

As the economy slowly recovers from the effects of inflation and recession, new growth will provide some freedom of movement. It should be a priority among governments to secure this increased freedom. The only way to do so is to go on with spending restraint so that there will be a gradual reduction in the percentage of the nation's resources committed in advance to programs that are hard to change. The dollar amounts involved cannot be reduced but the percentage of resources committed in advance can be.

As this happens, political parties and the country as a whole will have choices to make—what to do with this economic increment. More welfare state? More socialism? More reliance upon individuals and the private sector? Recognition that we have in existence an elaborate welfare structure and that redesigning and expanding it need not have the highest priority?

It would only be through finding answers to these questions with which enough Canadians agree that the Liberals, in or out of power, will regain political vitality.

In Appreciation

I would like to record my appreciation of a certain young man, Robert Hardy of Milgrove Street, who happened to be in the right place at the right time late on Saturday night (June 24) on Government Street.

Our car could not be driven owing to a defect in the gas pedal. I am no mechanic and my husband has arthritis. Robert came across the street, having heard the violent noise and offered to see if he could help. Without the aid of any tools or flashlight, and in almost total darkness, he found a broken spring in the linkage and made a temporary adjustment which enabled us to drive home safely.

Simple as the job may sound to those who would have known what to do, the fact that he was there and able to do it, saved us a great deal of frustration, inconvenience and expense. We were very grateful.

When so much is recorded to the detriment of the young people of today it is delightful to know that all youth is not alike and to record most willingly a mark on the other side of the ledger. Would there be more like him—and to Robert—thank you again. — Two Ordinary Folk.

Banking Policy

May I congratulate you on your very fine editorial Bring The Banks to heel.

The chartered banks are the greatest menace facing the future growth of our country as profits are placed above all other considerations and funds which are required for the development of the Nation are invested abroad without any thought of the well-being of Canada.

If I may criticize your editorial it would be the fact that you forgot to mention the power of the Senate banking committee which is composed of senators who were either involved directly in banking or other financial institutions. What chance has the Canadian public when the future of banking is being considered by a committee with such a background?

It would be of no avail to change the government from Liberal to Tory as there would be no change in banking policy. In fact Sinclair Stevens is the banking critic of the Tory shadow cabinet and, of course, he was the man who was involved in the creation of the Bank of Western Canada which fortunately did not get off the ground. During the last revision of the Bank Act some years ago I corresponded with Mitchell Sharp, who was the minister of finance and sent him the latest balance sheets of the chartered banks which showed that they were reaping large profits but my efforts were in vain and more concessions were granted to the chartered banks.

I am afraid it is a question of heads I win, tails you lose. — M. P. B. Wixson, 301-1701 Cedar Hill X Road.

Western Victims

The Committee for Western Independence wishes to go on record as being opposed to the imposition of bilingual air traffic control in the province of Quebec, as it is logically productive of greater potential danger to air passengers. It is our opinion that the government is again displaying a callous disregard for the well-being of all Canadians in its irrational insistence on the French language.

The Committee for Western Independence considers Western Canada as the victim of the same federal indifference to its plight, as is demonstrated by the Air Traffic Controllers' dispute. — Committee for Western Independence, P.O. Box 5008, Victoria.

Universal Safety

It appears that the Quebec government is forcing the management of the air planes into a very dangerous situation. Most airplane disasters take place when planes land. The planes' pilots and controllers must both be working as a unit requiring very close co-ordination. Can that necessary co-ordination be achieved when the instructions are issued in two languages?

Only 11 per cent of English-speaking Canadians have studied French intensively, and yet they very likely have little more ability than to order a meal in French and engage in small talk. How many pilots and controllers are fluent in French? English is almost universal. Many French people lose their French-speaking ability when they settle among English-speaking people.

How many people who learn French in school remember that language when they don't use it? How many airplane pilots are 100 per cent bilingual? Mr. Trudeau's efforts to force English-speaking people to learn French is far from successful. The operators of our air service know all this and have struck in protest and for greater universal safety. — R. P. Sinkinson, Gravelbourg, Sask.

Script Changing

May I have the use of a few lines of your newspaper to reply to John Fryer regarding his letter. Fryer replies, June 28, on my comments about the B.C. Government Employees Union.

Mr. Fryer has missed his calling. He would be much more suited as a comedian. The only thing that would be wrong with his act is the repetition. He appears incapable of changing his script.

He continually attempts to create the illusion that the present union conflict is a local issue perpetrated by non-union government employees.

Mr. Fryer also appears to have some difficulty with his hearing, for it would be only the most deaf who could not hear the outcries that have been reverberating in BCGEU union halls at recent union meetings and meetings set up by the union executive to investigate voting procedure shortcomings.

He also cannot comprehend that these outcries and the thousands of names on petitions are from union members, not Rand formula people.

Now that Mr. Fryer and I have become "pen pals" I think we should be less formal. Dal is fine with me, and being from the old school and all that rot, old chap, I would like to call you John Boy. It has that ring of the stuff men used to be made of.

There is a saying that there is a correct tool for every job. Well John Boy, I think my cracked crystal ball you say I use, is very suited, under the circumstances. — E. J. Dalzell, Victoria.

East Germany: The Great Sports Factory

By MICHAEL GETLER
Washington Post

LEIPZIG, East Germany — While East Germany's incredible corps of women swimmers were smashing every world record in East Berlin, little Ines Baumgartner was racing to a less-heralded victory around a cinder track in the back streets of this old trading city.

Ines' times for 800 metres was 2 minutes 31 seconds — no immediate threat to the world's record of just under two minutes for women. Ines, however, is not yet a woman. She has just turned 12. But she, along with thousands of other East German school children, has been sprinting the demanding 800-meter distance since she was ten.

The children in the schoolyards here, and the big-name swim stars in Berlin, are all a product of the same East German sports system — the most awesome, efficient, successful — yet somehow troubling — national sports program ever developed.

Seeming to come out of nowhere, Communist East Germany's success at winning medals in Olympic, World and European sports competitions in the past four years has been astounding — 99 medals, 31 of them gold, in Olympic competition alone during the 1972 summer and winter games in Munich and Sapporo, and the 1976 winter games at Innsbruck.

As they prepare for the 1976 summer games in Montreal this month, East German officials privately are predicting they will win 30-35 gold medals alone, many of them certain to be at the expense of the traditionally-dominant American swimming squad.

Close to the Top

For a country of only 17 million people, East Germany's competitive sports success far outstrips that of the U.S. or even the Soviet Union, countries with almost 20 times the population. In the last two winter Olympics, East Germany finished second only to their socialist brothers in Moscow. They were third behind Russia and the U.S. in Munich — where their women won no gold medals in swimming but now hold all eleven world records — and will be biting even harder at American heels in Montreal.

How this has happened is an extraordinary phenomenon that extends well beyond the world of sports into the realm of international politics, mass psychology, and sociology.

East Germany's sports success is no miracle. It didn't just happen. It began to unfold quietly behind closed borders 20 years ago and has dramatically exploded on the world's television screens in the past five years as the fruits of superb planning began to pay off and East Germany fought for recognition.

On the one hand, East Germany's sports success has helped this largely colorless but industrious Communist state brush up its generally non-existent international image at very little cost. It has helped them put a warm face, graceful

On the other hand, their success poses fascinating questions for sportsmen and sociologists everywhere, including the question of whether many countries, both East and West, have allowed the result of sport competitions to somehow become a measuring stick for the respective strengths of a society or political system.

What makes Ines run has been a well-kept East German secret for years. But more recently, perhaps buoyed by its success and its obviously rising standard of living, East Germany has been allowing Western journalists in to visit the schools, the sport clubs, the world famous college for sports instructors and doctors here in Leipzig, and to talk with their athletes. What emerges from a recent week-long visit is, as one not altogether envious West German puts it: "the perfect system — for sport."

In brief, it is a system that allows no young athletic talent to fall through the cracks. It has the direct and heavy involvement of the government at the highest levels. It involves Leipzig's unique four-year university that turns out thousands of professional trainers and coaches so that virtually all youngsters from the time they enter kindergarten are trained by people who know what they are doing.

Junior Olympics

The East German success story also grows out of an elite group of sport schools and sport clubs into which the most promising youngsters are funneled at a very early age, and a massive national sport competition known as the Spartakiad that boils down to a nation-wide junior Olympics every two years so that the cream always surfaces.

On top of all this, the same Leipzig university has pushed the state of sports medicine further than any other country to figure out what makes an athlete tick.

Finally, the Germans pick their sports very carefully and put heaviest emphasis on those that take place at international competitions.

In East Germany, sport has become a national cult, carried out for the glory of socialism under governmental pressure in a deadly serious and highly disciplined manner. If the first phase of GDR sports success was to put a better face on its international image, then the second phase now seems to be to prove the superiority of its system.

Robot Behavior

Judging from visits to several schools and gymnasiums here, East German youngsters in sport sessions seem to behave more like robots the older they get. They are extremely friendly and natural in many ways, but they don't seem to have much fun in sport classes. There is not even a hint of the traditional bedlam inside gymnasiums. The watchful eye of the trainer is always there. The lightning response of a student to a command to retrieve a shot-put ball or line-up for the next exercise is obvious.

Six-year-olds march into and out of gymnastics classes. Judges march into stadiums. Even at the GDR Olympic track and field, qualifications at Karl Marx Stadt, youngsters carrying plastic clothes bins march in unison from one side of the stadium to the other.

In every field, gym or pool, even for six-year-olds, there is a well-worn victory stand for the first three places. In every corner there is an old phonograph that plays something like ruffles and flourishes. The German youth gets medals for everything. By the time they reach the Olympics, they seem to have been there before.

GDR officials quickly tell Western visitors that such discipline is necessary for sports and has nothing to do with militarism. That is undoubtedly true. But it is still unnerving in combination with what amounts to a cradle-to-grave government attempt to decree public enjoyment and legislative health.

On the other hand, the Socialist system here has indeed developed many healthy and progressive attitudes toward sport. The Germans have made sports available to all, including sports such as sailing and canoeing which normally are limited only to the rich in the West. There are excellent public attitudes here toward keeping fit generally, with very few overweight children in evidence. There is excellent care taken by the public toward public facilities.

There is also a clearly heavier emphasis on women athletes here than in the West that has been a key factor in the GDR's sport success. Two-thirds of East Germany's international medals are won by their women athletes in swimming, track and field.

Some West Germans equate the rise of East German superstars in sports to the same situation that brought so many top Black stars in the U.S. — that sports was one of the few ways to the top.

Perfect System

"So with a big motivation they go into a perfect system and the result is medals," one West German says.

Some of that is undoubtedly true. But it also seems true that the East Germans, who along with the other 61 million Germans in the west have a long tradition in sports, have also refined the techniques for developing the complete athlete more than any other country on a mass scale.

What the Germans have not missed is the great capacity of women for athletic stardom. In fact, if there is anything wrong with the East German team, it is as one official here acknowledges, "the men." East German women dominate the team's success.

Ruth Fuchs, a 29-year-old Olympic champion javelin thrower, feels such success results from "the position of women in socialist societies. In the U.S. or France, the man who wins the gold is more popular than the woman. Here, we have more respect."

Professor Rudi Schramme, the coach of the GDR swim team, has a different view. He feels men do have more opportunities that distract them from athletic careers, even here. But more importantly, he says that women achieve their top physical performances 2-3 years earlier than men and that too many good male swimmers have been discarded too early by coaches impatient for victory. Thus, the GDR's 25-year-old Roland Matthes, twice a gold medalist at Munich, will be back at Montreal.

Schramme, and other German sportsmen, also are now convinced that women are as strong as men in terms of ability to train and there is no difference in the training regimen for the men and women squads here. "As long as other countries continue to believe the contrary, we will continue to have an edge," Schramme says. "Unfortunately, however, others now seem to be recognizing the same thing."

Big Strong Girls

The German women swimmers like 17-year-old Kornelia Ender are so young, big, muscular and successful that they have prompted charges in Western countries that they use anabolic steroids or hormones. The Germans emphatically deny this and indeed cooler Western trainers say the Germans don't need it. The Germans also deny they do bone analysis of youngsters to predict size. Like all coaches everywhere, Schramme says, we look for big people. If the parents are big, that is enough of an indication.

Ruth Fuchs at 29, Matthes at 25, double and gold-medalist in track Renate Stecher at 26, are all "old" by Western amateur athlete standards. This has raised the view that the older GDR athletes are in fact professionals.

For many of those here well beyond university age this clearly seems to be true. Unlike the West, there is no way to cash-in your medals here and turn professional in sports. So while Mark Spitz quits, Roland Matthes doesn't.

Fuchs feels top athletes are elite only in the sense they bring honor to their country and set a good example for their young countrymen. Very few top athletes defect now. In part, it may be because they are more attached to Germany's socialist ways. In part, however, it is also because they live pretty well as an elite group here and know that things are not as dramatically better materially in the West these days.

Politicians Out of Touch on Bilingualism

By DOUGLAS FISHER

OTTAWA — This tussle between the federal government (Otto Lang, Jean Chretien and the Liberal caucus from Quebec) and the air traffic controllers, the airline pilots, and most of the other pilots and the plane-owners of the country is a serious one. It may divide the country on a French versus English basis more effectively than any other single matter that has arisen since bilingualism became such a prime federal policy.

As I see it, the issue could destroy the Trudeau government and even wipe out the Liberal party as a force in English speaking Canada, much in the way the hanging of Louis Riel put the Tory party into a permanent ruck in French Canada.

Boeing Bid Set Aside

OTTAWA (CP) — The cabinet on Thursday gave brief consideration to a proposal to buy the Lockheed Orion patrol plane and then decided to wait another week before making a decision.

Government officials said the cabinet had too heavy an agenda to give more than brief consideration to a recommendation from its defence committee to acquire the Lockheed for about $1 billion.

They said the modified proposal of the Lockheed company, whose earlier bid to sell 18 Orions to the military died for lack of financing last May, will go before the treasury board for a check of financing arrangements Mohdany.

Then it would go back to cabinet Thursday.

The same officials had said Wednesday it was conceivable that the government would sign a contract with Lockheed next week.

Meanwhile, Defence Minister James Richardson and Supply Minister Jean-Pierre Goyer brushed aside a bid by the Boeing Co. to supply a patrol plane, saying it must await a final decision on the Lockheed proposal.

They said the Boeing plan is not complete and would require long study before a decision could be made.

Goyer told reporters "there

Farm Man Burned Papers

OTTAWA (CP) — Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan said Thursday that documents destroyed by the head of the Prairie Farm Assistance Administration in Regina were insignificant despite concern by two Progressive Conservative MPs.

Richardson said the Boeing offer is vague and would take months of study. He had said Lockheed is getting priority consideration because the government chose it over Boeing last year.

Only the fact the company could not raise needed financing stopped the acquisition of the aircraft.

Lockheed modified its proposal to cut the need for borrowing and resubmitted it. Officials say the cost will still be about $1 billion but added that the government will get better terms and conditions now than they would have before.

They gave no details.

Under the modified proposal Lockheed would start deliveries a year later than originally. Some sophisticated equipment would be delayed until some other time.

Many Fear New Inflation Spiral

By VICTOR MACKIE
Times Ottawa Bureau

of the economy. This mood of uncertainty has been in evidence for nearly a year.

OTTAWA — An increasing number of Canadians now expect prices to increase rapidly again over the next few months, according to the latest consumer survey conducted by the Conference Board of Canada, issued here Thursday.

"This is a rather disturbing development, since the success of the federal government's Anti-Inflation Program is dependent to a large extent on its capacity to permanently lower inflationary expectations," said the board.

However those reporting a readiness to buy furniture or carpeting in the next six months showed moderate declines.

Those planning a vacation away from home in the next year declined following two consecutive quarters of increases.

The board's index of consumer attitudes declined in the second quarter of 1976 leaving it below the year earlier level.

This development followed an increase in the first quarter which had brought the index up from the record low level registered in the final quarter of 1975.

"The dramatic fall in the index of consumer attitudes was largely a reflection of the uncertainties facing the consumer in evaluating the economic situation and outlook during the final months of the federal government's anti-inflation program," the board reported.

Between that time and early spring a number of developments took place which may have restored consumer confidence somewhat, it said.

These included, in the early months of this year, the slow ing of price increases as measured by the consumer price index. This was due largely to the performance of the food component of the index which fell steadily from February until April.

Recent developments in both price-movements and the labour market have been less encouraging the board found.

In particular food prices began to rise again in May and the monthly increase in the consumer price index accelerated sharply.

U.S. $2 BILL PROVES A FLOP

WASHINGTON (AP) —

There is a lot of buck-passing when it comes to the $2 bill.

Despite U.S. government predictions that it would be warmly received by the public as a partial substitute for the $1 bill, it so far has been a flop—hoarded but not spent.

More than 210 million $2 bills have been delivered by the government to banks, but relatively few have found their way into general circulation, officials say.

Millions of dollars worth apparently are being hoarded as collectors' items, especially those issued April 13, the first day.

Moreover, an official of the Riggs National Bank, the largest in the U.S. capital, said Thursday that most customers won't accept two.

"People don't want two because they are afraid they will get them mixed up with one," said a teller at Madison National Bank here.

"We're trying to think what to do about it because we think the government has something to be gained by successful circulation of the $2 bill," said a spokesman for the Federal Reserve.

Eventually, the Reserve hopes to push 400 million a year into circulation to substitute for half the 1.6 million $1 bills being printed annually.

Savings in printing costs might reach $27 million over five years.

CIA MAN BARES JFK PLOT

MIAMI (UPI) — Fidel Castro and Jack Ruby discussed "removal of the president" at a meeting 10 weeks prior to president John Kennedy's assassination, according to Watergate burglar and one-time CIA agent Frank Sturgis.

Sturgis said in a telephone interview Thursday he had been assigned to investigate possible involvement of Cuban exiles in the Kennedy assassination.

The investigation failed to show any Cuban exile links to Kennedy's death, but produced evidence that Kennedy assassin Lee Harvey Oswald and Ruby, who shot Oswald while Oswald was in police custody in Dallas, were "involved in the same conspiracy, along with other people," Sturgis said.

"Government agencies got quite a bit of information about this, not only from myself but from other intelligence sources in the U.S.," he said.

Sturgis said the Havana meeting included Fidel Castro, Raul Castro, Che Guevara, Cuban intelligence chief Ramiro (Red Beard) Valdez and an Argentine woman who was a KGB (Soviet intelligence) agent.

He said Ruby made several trips to Cuba in the months preceding Kennedy's death "trying to make a deal to sell arms to Cuba and to try to make a deal to obtain illicit drugs through Cuba for smuggling into the United States."

"At the meeting with Castro, sale of guns and the drug deal were discussed along with removal of the president, an attempt on the president's life," Sturgis said.

Massacres Expected — Expert

Times News Services

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa (AP) — Residents of most U.S. Indian reserves still expect massacres to occur when government authorities enter the reserve, an Indian scholar testified Wednesday at the trial of two Indians accused of shooting two FBI agents.

"There is a built-in expectation, particularly among Plains Indians, that with any real possibility that goes beyond the shouting stage, there is a real possibility that the U.S. will come in and kill everyone," Vine DeLoria of Golden, Colo., said.

He was testifying in the murder trial of Robert Robideau and Darelle Butler, American Indian Movement members accused of killing two FBI agents on the Pine Ridge Indian reserve in South Dakota last year.

DeLoria, an author and lawyer, cited 19th-century massacres and said the memory of them is still fresh among Indians.

DeLoria, a member of the Standing Rock Sioux tribe who grew up on the Pine Ridge reserve, said he has not returned there for three years.

Defense lawyer William Kunstler said the basic issue in the trial is the atmosphere of violence that prevailed on the reserve.

"There is an atmosphere that life is cheap for residents of Pine Ridge and the possibility of violence exists every day," said Kunstler, who heads a seven-man defense team.

Robideau and Butler, both of Oregon, are charged with the shooting deaths of FBI agents Jack Coler and Ronald Williams, both of the Los Angeles area, on June 24, 1975.

FBI director Clarence Kelley, under threat of contempt charges, testified Wednesday that about 150 FBI agents, armed with battlefield equipment, arrived at the reserve shortly after the shootings.

First Step To Pipeline Given Okay

OLYMPIA (AP) — Northern Tier Pipeline Co.'s application for permission to build an oil superport and pipeline was provisionally accepted by Washington State's energy facility site evaluation council Thursday.

That action, by a unanimous vote of the board, was only the first step in a lengthy process of gaining full state approval to build the $46-million project.

Northern Tier wants to build an oil superport at Port Angeles on the Strait of Juan de Fuca to receive Alaskan crude. A pipeline then would carry the oil to midwestern refineries, terminating in Clearbrook, Minn.

The council agreed to debate formal acceptance of the application July 26. The members also waived the normal 90-day period required between time a company files a notice of intent to file an application and the actual filing of the document.

The action came shortly after Clallam County commissioners accepted changes in the county's comprehensive plan designed to ban oil ports and all related facilities. Port Angeles is located in Clallam County.

"From Britain," a man said.

All the while the British security people were telling their U.S. colleagues not to interfere, because the Queen wished to shake hands.

Delay Pen Report

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP)
— Doug Jack, the coroner who presided at the recent inquest into last year's British Columbia Penitentiary hostage-taking incident in which prison worker Merv Steinhauser was killed, said Thursday that release of the Farris Report on the same incident should be delayed.

Jack said he's not happy about the release of the Farris Report so soon after the inquest which ended Tuesday.

The Farris Report resulted from a federal inquiry conducted last year into the hostage incident by B.C. Supreme Court Justice John Farris.

Jack said he will speak with the federal solicitor-general's office today about the contents of the Farris Report.

Jack said the reason he didn't want the Farris Report issued soon after the inquest is that it might conflict with the jury's findings. There had been reports that the federal government would make the Farris Report public after the inquest concluded.

The inquest absolved of any blame a six-man tactical squad which stormed the area of the prison where 15 hostages were held by three prisoners. A bullet from a tactical squad member's gun killed Miss Steinhauser but the jury was unable to determine which member fired the shot.

Socred Raps Ferry Fare Hike

NANAIMO — The defeated Social Credit candidate in Nanaimo in the last provincial election, appealed today to the government to reduce ferry rates.

"The government should pay less attention to the fact that the ferry system is not paying for itself and more to the over-all benefits it brings to people, such as jobs and services," said Graeme Roberts.

He observed that the province would gain nothing if the increased ferry rates resulted in the loss of thousands of jobs and business.

Roberts, defeated by David Stupich (NDP) in the Dec. 13, election, said he sees nothing wrong in criticizing his own political party.

"If I hadn't allowed people to show up some of the shortcomings of my business, I wouldn't be a successful businessman," he said. "Governments, as well as business, have to, from time to time, look at themselves in the mirror."

"This is the way we can see if we have made mistakes."

Roberts said he has no doubt the government made a mistake in boosting fares to their present level.

"Governments, like anybody else, are capable of making mistakes," he added.

"But if they are sensitive to the will of the people, they are equally capable of correcting their mistakes."

Transport Minister Jack Davis should "pocket his pride" and reduce the fares, he said.

"You don't need to be a Rhodes scholar to understand which was better for the Island economy — ferries full at $5 a car or ferries half full at $10 a car."

Highway Carnage Slashed In Committee's First Year

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — A citizen's committee here has good reason to celebrate its first birthday this week.

The birthday present for the Take the Car Out of Carnage Committee is a set of impressive statistics that is its reward for efforts in educating drivers about road hazards.

The number of road deaths in the Prince George area has dropped 45.6 per cent to 25 during the period from July 1, 1975, to July, 1976 from 46 a year before.

The number of injured has dropped to 455 from 667.

The number of accidents involving alcohol has also dropped to 189 from 373.

"One thing we know from talking to the hospital doctors on duty in the emergency ward is that the number of serious accidents has declined too," said Jim Frey, regional superintendent for the province's Motor Vehicle Branch and the new chairman of the carnage committee.

The committee's efforts have been cited in medical journals, both provincial and national, as well as other organizations and groups.

John Evans, past chairman, said the committee was formed by private individuals, businesses, and organizations to substantially reduce motor vehicle accidents involving death, injury and damage.

Hospital Emergency Care Fees Up

VANCOUVER (CP) — Depending on the hospital they visit, southern British Columbia residents seeking emergency ward treatment for minor ailments face bills of between $4 and $20.

Most Greater Vancouver and Vancouver Island hospitals said Thursday they have been raising non-emergency fees to discourage people with routine ailments from cluttering overcrowded emergency wards.

"People with sore throats, skin rashes and sore toes have no business coming to the emergency department of a hospital," said Mel Petremen, medical co-ordinator at Nanaimo Regional Hospital.

Petremen said his hospital was forced to double fees to $10 from $5 on June 1.

He said that, as family doctors become busier and are unable to arrange consultations as quickly as in the past, may patients with minor medical problems are turning to the nearest emergency ward.

Burnaby General, Surrey Memorial, Richmond General, St. Paul's in Vancouver and Lions Gate in North Vancouver have all raised their fees for non-emergency care, but only Lions Gate which charged $20 has noticed any benefits.

The number of outpatients seeking care for minor ailments has dropped dramatically, said assistant administrator Charles Riley.

The other hospitals charge $10, up from $5 in all cases except Richmond General which charged $2 prior to June 1.

Vancouver General's fee remains at $4.

"We have looked at the idea of putting our fees up but in our situation we expect a raise would increase our bad debts," said VGH executive director Dr. Chapin Key.

Victoria General accountant Jim Goddard said the hospital is sticking to its $5 fee because it deals with a lot of transients who do not have a doctor.

Health Minister Bob McClelland said the province has no role in setting the fees, adding that it is the decision of individual hospital boards.

Leukemia Victims Surviving

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Punishment, deterrence and rehabilitation are usually the main factors in determining any sentence—and in one case Thursday in Victoria, provincial court, rehabilitation far outweighed the others in the eyes of Judge F. S. Green.

Glenn Stephen Schulmeister, 23, a federal prisoner inmate, pleaded guilty Wednesday to Victoria charges of impaired driving, driving while under a suspension, driving without insurance and causing a disturbance by being drunk, all in 1974.

The question before Green was whether the sentences should involve added time or run at the same time as a four-year term imposed on Schulmeister in November, 1974, for possession of heroin for trafficking.

Defence lawyer Rodney Smith said Schulmeister had been trying since early 1975 to get the Victoria charges dealt with in court.

Then he added that Schulmeister had upgraded his education to completion of Grade 12 and one first-year university course from his Grade 8 level on entering prison in 1974. Schulmeister, a carpenter, had also worked well on a model low-cost home.

Green set three short jail terms to run at the same time plus a $250 fine for no-insurance and said he would have imposed another same-time jail sentence for that if the law had allowed it.

"I don't want my motives to be mistaken," said the judge.

"It is not in the interests of the accused or the public to make the sentences consecutive. I have no intention of destroying whatever rehabilitation which may have taken place."

A witness whose arrest had been ordered June 30 by another judge was discharged by Green after defence lawyer Jeffrey Green explained why the witness, Victoria area resident Kerry Joe Kelly, had failed to attend the trial of a man Kelly charged with common assault.

Green said Kelly was a stained-glass artist who went to San Francisco to buy special materials, expecting to be back in Victoria June 29 but was held overtime by business negotiations. Kelly sent word to Victoria but it did not reach court in time.

Green declined to impose costs and prosecutor Lang said the prosecution wanted it known that it might lay charges of contempt of court against missing witnesses in future.

Detention in custody was ordered by Green for Conrad Lucas, 17, of 1120 McClure, one of two persons facing a joint Victoria charge of breaking and theft Wednesday at Astonishing Books and Comics, 946 Fort.

The other accused youth was released on an undertaking to return. Both chose trial in provincial court and pleaded not guilty. Trial was set for Aug. 5 amid indications at least one scheduled trial may be put aside so Lucas can receive the earliest possible hearing.

In the court section of Judge William Ostler, preliminary hearings of two major narcotics charges ended with orders for higher-court trials.

The first concerned a charge against Surrey area resident Robert Randall Schindelka, 26, of trafficking in heroin April 16 in Esquimalt.

The second involved a joint charge against Blair Gordon Birch, 27, of 889 Cloverdale, and Steven James Glover, 23, of 1495 Fort, of trafficking in marijuana March 22 in Saanich.

In both cases, defence lawyers won approval of requests for orders prohibiting publication or broadcast of the evidence.

Ball was set by Green at $1,000 in cash or one surety for Perry Larue, 46, of 268 Superior, who was charged with assault causing bodily harm June 17 to a woman in Victoria. Larue chose trial in provincial court, pleaded not guilty and had his trial set for Aug. 24.

She Can't Go Into Stores Alone

A Victoria provincial court judge ruled Thursday that bail for a 41-year-old Esquimalt woman would include an order barring her from entering any business unless a "responsible adult" is with her.

Judge F. S. Green ended a bail hearing on a four-count Victoria false-pretences charge against Joyce Cherniwhan, 1029 Esquimalt, by saying she could be released on her own recognizance in the sum of $1,000.

But, he added, she must "abstain absolutely from entering any business outlet unless she is accompanied by a responsible adult."

Court records and statements by prosecutor Nicholas Lang and Legal Aid defense lawyer Roderick MacDonald during the bail hearing showed Ms. Cherniwhan was released June 30 on her understanding to return Thursday.

That release followed the reading during three court appearances in May and June of six charges containing 22 counts of false pretences and one count of fare fraud in Victoria, Saanich or Esquimalt.

Green said he was setting the new bail because of "some concern for the protection of the public." There was no request for an order prohibiting publication or broadcast of bail-hearing details.

At MacDonald's request, all charges were remanded to July 20 for further hearing.

Earlier this month, Green dealt with a "routine" first offence of shoplifting by a 74-year-old Victoria woman by putting her on probation for four months and ordering her not to enter the victimized store, The Bay, in that period.

That release followed the reading during three court appearances in May and June of six charges containing 22 counts of false pretences and one count of fare fraud in Victoria, Saanich or Esquimalt.

Green said he was setting the new bail because of

Drinking Fine Levels at $500

If there is a higher standard fine in Victoria provincial court's traffic section for first drink-drive offenders, it appears to be $500 after Judge Harold Alder fined nine motorists that much on Thursday.

But court officials said no higher standards for fines have been set or even discussed since a change in Canadian law April 26 increased the maximum penalty for a first offence of impaired driving to a $2,000 fine and six months in jail from $500 and the same jail term.

Fines for drink-drive offences, as well as sentences for all other offences, are up to the individual judge and the B.C. system of rotating provincial court judges among the various courtrooms means a different person on the traffic bench each month.

Two $1,000 fines were imposed in Victoria traffic court shortly after the April 26 change but the standard remained mainly in the old $500 to $450 range until Thursday.

Alder's action came two days after a Vancouver prosecution spokesman said attempts would be made to seek increased fines and one day after Greater Victoria regional chief prosecutor J. W. Anderson forecast similar action here.

But Alder exceeded $500 in two cases.

Eric Stanley Carey, 59, of 145 Helmcken, was sentenced to 14 days in jail as a second offender after pleading guilty to a Saanich charge of impaired driving June 29.

Pierre Grondin, 20, of 879 Esquimalt, pleaded guilty to a Saanich charge of dangerous driving June 29 when police chased a speeding motorcycle and was fined $300.

The nine $500 fines followed guilty pleas, seven to separate charges of impaired driving. They were:

Andrew Jamieson, 54, of 9180 Lochside, stopped July 2 in Sidney; John William Kaiser, 52, of 2032 Ardwell, June 13 in Sidney; Ian Freeman MacArthur, 55, of 200 Farmington, June 26 in Saanich; Gilbert Terrence Russell, 44, of 735 Chesterlea, June 24 in Saanich; Stanley Raymond Sam, 23, East Saanich, June 27 in Central Saanich; Robert Arthur Scantlebury, 23, of 2356 Maraview, June 6 in Sidney, and David Harold Thompson, 28, of 4011 Quadra, July 3 in Saanich.

Fined for driving with a blood-alcohol reading above .06 per cent were Thomas Bertram Blair, 22, of 10187 Resthaven, stopped June 2 in Sidney, and Bradley John Ingram, 18, of 874 Colville, July 3 in Esquimalt.

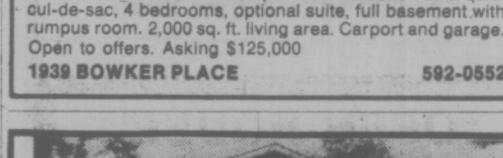

B.C. motor vehicles superintendent R. G. Whitlock said the increased penalties might help reduce drink-driving if the courts used them,

Up-Islanders Want 'Rest of the Carrot'

POR HARDY — "We want the rest of the 'carrot,'" residents here are chanting, and to prove it they plan to hike 6½ miles through the Tsitika and Eve River valleys.

Sparked by the local weekly here, the North Island Gazette, residents say they are annoyed that every election politicians dangle a carrot in front of them promising completion of the north Island highway.

This year the provincial government made no provision in its highway budget for continuing construction of the route.

Highways Minister Alex Fraser was impressed enough to meet a delegation in May, but said flatly no more money would be spent this year, and further, that nothing was planned for next year either.

Arguing that he could not commit funds on next year's budget, Fraser told the delegation. "You have access already, by land and by sea."

The residents looked at the logging road which wandered from one side of the Island to the other and at the $21 ferry rate and got madder.

Now they're going to walk the route this Sunday to emphasize the short distance that the government refuses to build.

While the actual gap is 22 miles, a lot of the route is spanned by secondary logging roads already, and the longest part that remains inaccessible by vehicle is 6½ miles.

This portion stretches through the beautiful Tsitika and Eve River valleys and the organizers are enthusiastic about making the public aware of the natural beauty on their doorstep.

In Campbell River, to the south of the missing link, a party of hikers is also being formed to march north and meet the southbound group at the halfway mark. An unnamed creek at the point has been dubbed Carrot Creek by the organizers, the "Rest of the Carrot" committee.

"The government's position on the highway has ranged from ice-cold to lukewarm at the best of times," said committee chairman Roland Shanks. "They demonstrated their ignorance of the North Island and its needs when we met with them in May," he said.

PARKSVILLE PAGEANT ON

PARKSVILLE — Parksville Pageant Days opened today with a trade fair and will continue through Sunday, ending with the Qualicum Beach Air Show.

This evening there will be a Legion-sponsored bingo at the Community Hall, fireworks near the beach at 10:15 p.m. and the Lions' Bavarian garden opening at 7.

Parksville Kinsmen Club will provide breakfast Saturday and Sunday starting at 7 a.m.

The annual inner tube race on Englishman River will get underway at noon on Sunday, as a part of pageant days.

In addition to prizes for first over the finish line, there will be awards for best costumes, the first girls' team as well as for mixed teams.

Following the inner tube race, interest will switch to Qualicum Beach airport where Parksville-Quailicum Aero Club is putting on an air festival in conjunction with pageant days. The air show will get off the ground at 2 p.m. Sunday.

Drivers Drinking More

COURTENAY — Statistics released by the Courtenay detachment of the RCMP indicate that impaired driving charges in this area are up considerably in the first six months of this year.

According to the report, 231 charges were laid under Section 224 and 236 of the Criminal Code compared with 165 last year. Breath-test demands were read to 75 individuals, while in 1975 the number was 202.

The statistics also disclosed drivers were drinking more heavily in this area, considered to have one of the highest incidences of impaired driving offences in B.C.

The average reading rose from .136 per cent blood-alcohol to .158 per cent, and fewer charges were laid under the lesser of the two Criminal Code offences.

Cpl. Ken Osmond said increased manpower and patrols were factors contributing to the number of charges laid.

Fatalities rose from five to eight in Courtenay and the surrounding district, but the total number of accidents dropped. To the end of June, there were 410, as opposed to 507 last year.

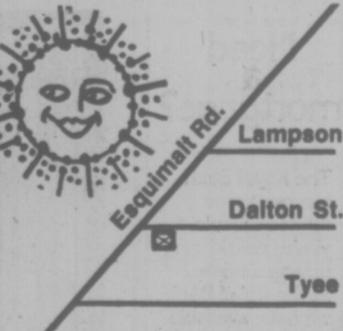

Driving without due care and attention was given as the major cause of both city and district accidents.

Court Date July 13

COURTENAY — Nineteen-year-old William Patrick Evans of Courtenay has been ordered to appear in provincial court July 13 to enter a plea on a charge of arson.

The case was remanded earlier this week for the accused to obtain legal counsel.

Prospects Are Bright For Russians

MONTREAL (AP) — The Soviet Union, in a powerful demonstration of athletic depth and consistency, won gold medals in all but four of the 23 sports at the 1972 Olympics in Munich.

The prospects now are for another overwhelming performance by the Soviet Union, which has the dual luxuries of having a large sports-loving populous and a government willing to provide funds for its Olympic sports and participants.

The Russians made their Olympic debut in 1952 and, since then, have won more gold medals than any nation. In 1972, the Soviets won 50 events—17 more than the U.S., the runnerup. East Germany won 20 events.

The United States matches

the Soviet Union in population and sports interest but does not subsidize its athletes to the extent the Russians do. East Germany provides athletic subsidies, but is at a disadvantage, having less than one-tenth the population of the Soviet Union.

At Munich, the Russians dominated the track and field competition, the wrestling, gymnastics, and canoeing events. They also won a gold medal in basketball, ending the United States' Olympic string of gold medals that began in 1936.

The Russians won women's volleyball and water polo. They took gold medals in boxing, equestrian, judo, pentathlon, rowing, shooting, diving, weightlifting and yachting.

They were shut out of gold medals in archery, where they now have a world champion, but did win bronze. There was no Russian gold in the team sports of field, hockey, handball or soccer. The Russians, however, did win a bronze medal in soccer.

The Russians' worst performance came in swimming and diving, where, out of a possible 132 medals, they won only a gold, a silver and a bronze.

The Russians won at least one medal in every individual sport. In total medals—which include team and relay events—they picked off 207. The U.S. finished with 139, while East Germany had 127 and West Germany had 102.

The Russians again are expected to dominate the Olympies, which run from July 17-Aug. 1. They should field strong teams in many of the events they won in 1972.

In the scramble for medal supremacy, the U.S. doesn't appear to have the depth to match the Russians and East Germany could challenge the U.S. for second place in the total medal count.

The United States isn't going to get whipped, but it's not going to do as well as most people expect, either," said Doc Counsilman, coach of the American men swimmers. "All minor sports play second fiddle in the United States.

"Countries like East Germany and Russia are really pushing Olympic sports. We could win every gold medal if we did that."

East Germany is a prime example of an accelerated sports movement. Four years ago, the East German women swimmers managed three silvers and a bronze.

Now, they own 12 world records in the 13 Olympic events. The lone non-German record-holder is Shirley Babashoff of the United States in the 800-metre freestyle.

The East German men, with Roland Matthes winning the 100- and 200-metre backstrokes in each of the last two Olympic Games, are stronger than in 1972 but not nearly as strong as the Americans.

The strongest of East Germany's superpowers is Kornelia Ender, who holds four world records. She could win as many as five individual races and participate on two winning relay teams at Montreal.

In the backstroke, butterfly and breaststroke events (100 and 200 metres in each), the East Germans have six world record holders.

The track and field competition is more wide open than the swimming. Of the 14 women's events on the track and field program in 1972, six were won by East Germans, four by West Germans, three by Russians and one by a now-retired secretary from London.

There were 23 events on the men's card, with the Soviet Union and the U.S. each winning six, Finland three, East Germany and Kenya two each and four countries with one gold medal apiece.

The American men's track and field team, long the dominating force in this sport, has resisted the East European onslaught better than the women.

Dwight Stones, world record holder in the high jump, leads an American squad that could better the six medals it won at Munich.

Other American world record holders are Rick Wohlbauer in the 800 metres, Mac Wilkins in the discus and Dave Roberts in the pole vault.

In other sport, gymnastics have been dominated by the Russians and Japanese for years. In 1972, the East Germans rose to prominence with three gold medals, while the Soviet Union picked up six and Japan took five.

At Montreal, the Russian gymnasts are heavy favorites to win most of the women's medals, with Lyudmila Turischcheva and Olga Korbut, now 21, who was the sensation of the Games four years ago.

But the favorite for the individual women's championship is 15-year-old Nadia Comaneci of the Soviet Union, rated by many the best female gymnast in the world.

In the pentathlon, the Soviet Union won the team title in 1972. Russian Pavel Lednev finished third in Munich but, with three successive world titles, is favored to take the gold in Montreal. Hungary is rated the second best in this event.

The United States, which won one boxing gold in 1972, has its best team in several Olympics.

Roughriders Rout Alouettes; Lions Too Much For Eskimos

By The Canadian Press

It took less than two minutes Thursday night for Saskatchewan Roughriders to turn a close football game into a rout.

The Roughriders, leading Montreal 14-7 with three minutes to play in their Canadian Football League exhibition game, scored three fast touchdow ns to beat the Alouettes 25-7.

Veteran quarterback Ron Lancaster started the Saskatchewan sputter at 12:09 when he connected with Al Ford on an eight-yard scoring play.

Randy Mattingly, fighting for the No. 2 job with the Riders, took over in the 14th minute, throwing touchdown passes 27 seconds apart to Leif Petersen.

The first came after Ian Mofford had fumbled the kickoff following Ford's touchdown and the second was set up by a pass interception.

In Thursday's other CFL exhibition games, British Columbia Lions downed Edmonton Eskimos 18-11 and Calgary Stampeders defeated Ottawa Rough Riders 39-37.

At Vancouver, 17,602 fans saw touchdow ns by Mike Strickland and Lou Harris and the kicking of Lui Passaglia enable the Lions to hand the Eskimos, the 1975 Grey Cup champions, their third successive loss.

Strickland scored on a two-yard run in the first quarter and Harris recovered a fumble by Edmonton punt returner Mike Fink and ran 18 yards for a touchdown in the third quarter.

Strickland ran two yards for the six points through a gapin hole opened by centre Al Wilson and tackle Allen Galalher.

Middle-linebacker Dave Benson, subbing for the injured Ray Nettles, played another strong game for the Lions and recovered two fumbles in the fourth quarter, the second of which led to Pas saglia's field goal.

Sciarra and Mike Ernst shared the quarterbacking duties for the Lions while Wilkinson and Bruce Lemmerman handled the Eskimos.

The Eskimos held a wide edge in offence, rushing 134 yards and passing for 219 for 333 yards while the Lions managed 73 yards on the ground and 108 through the air.

The Eskimo quarterbacks completed 19 of 42 passes while the Lions were good on seven of 19 attempts.

But Edmonton lost four of five fumbles and the Lions picked off one pass.

A 49-yard field goal by Cyril McFall with eight seconds remaining gave the Stampeders their win.

Trailing 37-36 before a crowd of 22,551, the Stampeders had a promising drive stalled by a holding penalty and McFall was forced to kick for the winning points.

McFall's kick was good.

Passaglia kicked a single, two converts and a field goal for the Lions, while Edmonton's Dave Cutler had three field goals and two singles.

The Lions got their first touchdown by moving 101 yards in 11 plays under rookie quarterback John Sciarra.

Nothing's Routine On British Course

SOUTHPORT, England (AP) — Although they are no longer surprised by it, the world's best golfers continue to find that strange things can happen when they hit a golf ball in Britain.

The type of golf being seen at Royal Birkdale in the 105th British Open this week is not the kind seen in the United States.

The thick, bushy rough that guards every fairway, the deep bunkers, the weird bounces off humpy terrain and the unpredictable breezes make every swing an adventure. Nothing is routine.

"This is the way it should be," says 26-year-old Tom Kite, one of the most promising of the young U.S. golfers now on tour with more than $100,000 in earnings this year.

"Noby wants to see a guy hit one into the weeds and thrash around.

They want to see if you can do something about it.

"The courses on the U.S. tour, for the most part, are well manicured. They cut down the rough. There are no mounds, sandhills, gorse (prickly bushes found in Britain) and heather."

"Here, you have to invent so many shots—standing on your head or hitting a ball four feet below you."

Only Severiano Ballesteros, a 19-year-old Spaniard who is one of the top players in Europe, managed to escape most of the pitfalls with a second 68 Thursday for a 138 total and a two-stroke lead over Johnny Miller of the lead over Johnny Miller of the lead over over two rounds.

Ballesteros did it by hitting the ball to the centre of the fairways, then directly to the green.

Only seven other golfers managed to break the two-round par of 144 on the 7,001-yard course that softened to slightly lower scores on the second day as the field of 155 was cut to 82 with a score of 150 the cutoff.

Hubie Green of the U.S. managed a 142 and Ray Floyd of the 105th, was in at 143. But Kite, Jack Nicklaus, Gary Player and Jerry Pate could only match par.

Tom Weiskopf had a 145, Hale Irwin 146 and Arnold Palmer and Tom Watson 147s. Carl Higgins, a little-known assistant club pro from Dennis, had a 67 at the Heywood Open.

Bunched at 65 were Mike McCullough, Gene Frank, Carlton White and Bob Dickson. Joe Porter, Gary McCord and Rex Caldwell were at 66.

Defending champion Roger Maltbie came in at two-under par 69—a score posted by 19 other players. The 1974 Quad Cities titlist, Dave Stockton, was among nine players at 68.

Of the 147-man field, 70 had sub-par scores.

Most of the tour pros are in the British Open, but Maltbie said he entered here "because as defending champion I had a responsibility, but more than that, because I wanted to."

Maltbie set the previous course record at 64 in the final round a year ago.

Denise Payne casts a discriminating eye on local wine

S. African Wines Return

South African wines will be back on the government liquor store shelves by early August, a spokesman for the Liquor Administration Board said this week.

A freighter is expected to off-load four containers of wine and brandy in Vancouver on July 13. Four more containers should arrive the following week and another four that have just been dispatched out of Capetown ought to reach B.C. shores within two months. Each container contains 1,000 cases.

But whether the South African products will achieve the same popularity they once had with British Columbians is another matter. For the LAB spokesman said there will be an average 30 per cent price hike on each bottle.

Liquor from South Africa was banned two years ago by the former NDP government in protest over that country's apartheid policy. The ban was lifted by the Social Credit government this spring.

British Columbians are enjoying their wines like never before, despite the cost, despite the hard times.

Last year's rate of consumption was equivalent to 10 bottles for every man, woman and child in the province. This year's will probably hit 11, maybe 12 — a full case.

As the popularity of wine drinking has increased so has the appeal for better, quality wines. And that's been good news for foreign vintners.

Between 1972 and 1975 sales of imported wines jumped nearly 50 per cent to 618,000 cases. On the other hand B.C. wine sales edged up only about one per cent to 1,285,000 cases and other Canadian wines declined about five per cent to 68,000 cases.

Compared with the first four months of 1975, this year's growth rate in sales of imported wines is double the marginal sales increase of domestic products, 10 per cent versus five per cent.

Plainly, British Columbians are becoming more discriminating about the wines they drink. And that comes as no surprise to Arnold Ferguson, Victoria area manager for the Liquor Administration Board.

"It has been proven in the past in other countries that as people get more used to drinking wine they gravitate to the drier, quality wines," he says.

Oenophiles (Wine Lovers) Choose Quality

Nick Clark, chief purchaser for the LAB suggests another reason for the growing popularity of imported wines. And this may come as surprise to all but the most perceptive connoisseur.

Prices on about 100 imported wines actually dropped this year, the decrease brought about by the NDP-initiated price freeze and a strengthening of the Canadian dollar abroad.

Clark says when this year's orders were put in last fall suppliers were told by the government that because of the price freeze, it would not pay any more than a two per cent increase. It was a take-it-or-leave-it proposition and nearly every supplier agreed to go along with it.

The increase was not passed on to consumers but absorbed by the LAB. That meant instead of getting 117 per cent profit on imported wines (the profit level set by government order-in-council), the LAB had to be satisfied with about 115 per cent.

It didn't last long. With the devaluation of currencies in France, Italy, Spain, Germany and Portugal — the top five wine exporters to B.C. — the profits were pushed back to their old level and in some cases above.

Because the law prohibits the LAB from charging more than 117 per cent profit on each bottle of imported wines, an adjustment had to be made to the prices of certain brands, to the benefit of the consumer.

In a Times survey of Greater Victoria residents' wine-tastes, managers of three government liquor stores indicated foreign brands were the biggest sellers among the still wines.

Gaman, from Bulgaria, Yago, from Spain, and the Italian product, Rufino, were considered the most popular red wine choices. Hemes, also Bulgarian, Yago, Grivesac from France, and German wines such as Blue Danube headed the list of favored white wines. All are priced from $2.25 to $4.

That's not to say Canadian wines aren't popular. Indeed, they account for two-thirds of all wine sold in the province.

But their popularity vis-a-vis imported varieties seems to vary from store to store.

For instance at the Esquimalt and Tillicum stores locally produced sparkling wines — "pop wines" — far outsell their imported counterparts.

The competition among foreign vintners to gain a piece of the B.C. market is at times intense. And once a wine is absorbed, it has to sell, or it will be delisted. That's what happened to the Australian Penfolds wine earlier this year when they failed to achieve their sales quota set by the LAB.

Notwithstanding the growing ears over soaring liquor prices, Woodland Bellique wine prices in B.C. are reasonable.

He notes Alberta's prices are much lower (Pontet Canet costs about $8 there compared to $13 here), but he's quick to point out B.C.'s prices are comparable to Ontario's.

Tillicum branch manager Bill Gee says all wines are underpriced considering wage and salary hikes over the years.

"Back in 1960 you could buy an Australian wine for $1.35 and now it's $2.50. A Canadian wine was 90 cents and today is $1.75. But wages have certainly jumped more than that, so they're more than doubled."

For those who balk over the cost of wine, however, there are two solutions.

One, of course, is to make your own wine. And, says Gordon Schenck, wine-making instructor at Camosun College, more and more people are doing just that.

Schenck describes the growth in number of "base-meal wineries" as "steady and unswerving" over the past 15 years.

It costs about $25 to get the equipment needed to produce five gallons of wine on a continuing basis. Beyond that, the home-made wine is cheaper by far, roughly one-fifth the liquor store price, he says.

The other solution is the simplest: just abstain.

But it would appear there are few people in British Columbia these days prepared to go quite that far.

Developers in 'Middle'

Art Show Scores

The head of a small development company with land at Triangle Mountain said Thursday he and other developers are stuck in the middle of a fight between regional and provincial governments over planning control.

Norman Sewell, president of Dobraden Holdings Ltd., 5782 Oldfield Rd., was responding to comments by Jim Campbell, chairman of the Capital Region Board, who said the board will continue efforts to freeze subdivision development over about 1,500 acres in the Colwood area until new regional planning regulations come into effect eight or nine months from now.

At present the provincial highways department is the agency which must approve subdivision plans in unorganized areas such as Colwood.

The regional board has failed twice this year to persuade Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis to institute or allow a temporary development freeze in the area.

The board is afraid the half-dozen developers holding land there will meet less restrictive highways department standards and launch uncordinated housing schemes, destroying regional plans for an area-wide sewage system and such features as balanced greenbelts.

Sewell, who said he is not a professional developer, owns 27 acres off Bexhill Road, part of Triangle Mountain, where he wants to subdivide and sell 35 lots.

He said he is further ahead with his plans than the other developers in the area, in fact they have been approved by the highways department.

He has been waiting to see the fate of the proposed regional land freeze bylaw and now that it has been rejected by Curtis, he will go ahead.

Consumer Product Warranties are not — admittedly — a subject that excites the imagination. It doesn't capture public interest nor does it initiate media debate.

Yet, new consumer product warranty legislation will affect the daily lives of Canadians more than any decisions made on more "note-worthy" and exciting subjects such as capital punishment, abortion, pornography, violence on TV — or for that matter in the hockey rink.

Consumer Product Warranty legislation was introduced in Ontario in mid-June.

Ontario Consumer Minister Sidney Handelman said, in introducing the bill, that it would not be debated at this time, but that it has been introduced now to show the federal government and the other provinces what Ontario has in mind in the development of a consistent and uniform system of warranties for Canada.

There is no question that warranty reform is long overdue in Canada. The Sale of Goods Act, now 80-years old, is obsolete and difficult to apply.

Warranty reform has been a subject of intensive study over the years, with Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Ontario leading the way.

In Ontario, for example, the Law Reform Commission Report was published on warranties in 1972 with a provincial government Green Paper following within a year.

The Commission Report identified the shortcomings of existing warranty legislation as being based on the "fictitious premise that the parties (consumer and seller) are bargaining from positions of equal strength and sophistication."

It goes on to say, "Especially serious is the Act's pre-occupation with the bilateral relationship between the seller and the buyer, which totally ignores the powerful position of the manufacturer or today's marketing structure. This results ... in shielding the manufacturer from contractual responsibility to the consumer."

The proposed Ontario act provides that when there is a joint warranty by the seller

The warranty applies to products sold by description (catalogue) or by sample. If the goods are sub-standard in any way, such as "seconds," the onus is on the seller to disclose that the goods are not suitable for all purposes.

Spare parts and reasonable repair facilities must be available to the consumer and the product and its components must perform for a reasonable length of time.

The legislation is general "umbrella" legislation at this stage, which is completely consistent with the existing philosophy and method of dealing with consumer related problems.

Dishwasher No Longer Appliance Stepchild

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Although the dishwasher was invented more than 60 years ago, throughout much of its history it has been an appliance stepchild.

It was not until the housing boom that followed the Second World War that the dishwasher began to find a place in the North American household. Today, the dishwasher is no longer considered a luxury by a generation raised to the idea that you don't have to have your hands in soapy water three times a day to prove your worth as a homemaker.

With a majority of the dishwashers installed in the '50s and early '60s well past their prime, a booming replacement market has developed and manufacturers have made improvements to overcome the early consumer complaints having to do with cleaning ability, operating noise and the need for rinsing.

Here's a checklist of what to look for in a new under-counter dishwasher, prepared by a major appliance manufacturer.

—Good sound insulation is a must for peace of mind. Make sure the model you buy has insulation all around, not just on the top or sides.

—Consider the type of material used for the tub interior. Metal tubs, usually stainless steel, are chip-proof but can develop surface rust and even leak at the seams in extreme cases.

Porcelain enamel resists surface rust and seam leaks but can chip and rust and is difficult to repair. Plastic coatings resist steam leaks and are chip-proof; they can be cut, but are easily repaired. New one-piece moulded solid plastic tubs cannot rust, chip or peel.

—Reversible door panels simplify changing your kitchen decor. Some dishwashers come with a choice of colors.

—A built-in soft-food dispenser will eliminate most scraping and pre-rinsing. Large or hard scraps of course, must always be removed.

—To cut energy costs, look for a power-saver option that lets you omit the heated drying cycle, a rinse-and-hold setting, or a short-wash cycle.

—A rinse-aid dispenser is considered a necessity in hard-water areas to prevent water spotting.

—Ask acquaintances who have purchased a dishwasher recently about its performance. Take into consideration the reputation of both the manufacturer and dealer of brands available locally.

New Plastic Bottle

STOCKHOLM (CP) — The Swedish firm PLM has developed a returnable plastic bottle for soft drinks.

The polyester bottle is chemically inert and as pure as glass, the company said. It has a capacity of 24 pints and weighs less than a quarter of an ounce, 13 times less than the standard returnable bottle which has two-thirds of its capacity.

The company said its bottle can be dropped, partially filled, from a height of more than one foot without breaking and its manufacture consumes 70 per cent less energy than a standard glass bottle.

The plastic could be recycled for a wide variety of articles including textiles and yachting cordage.

THE ART OF MAKING SAUERKRAUT

Making sauerkraut is not difficult if you wait until cool fall weather to tackle the job. All you need is an earthenware crock and a cabbage slicer. I bought both in an antique shop for $8.00.

Slice up your cabbage heads by sliding them over the blade (or blades) of the "krautcutter." Then salt the shredded mass at the rate of $\frac{3}{4}$ tablespoons of seasoning to five pounds of kraut.

Work up five pounds of cabbage at a time, mix in the salt and place the kraut in a good-sized earthen crock. Keep mashing the kraut down in the container with a potato masher or similar tool (I use a baseball bat) and fill the crock to within five inches of its top. By then, juice should cover the kraut when you press it down hard with the potato masher, bat or whatever.

Cover the mass with several thicknesses of a clean cloth and top that with a plate that fits the circumference of the crock. Weight the plate down with a rock or other heavy object (a jar of water will do) to keep the kraut down under the juice.

A scum forms on the surface of the kraut juice as the cabbage ferments. Remove the deposit or if — as usually happens — the cloth soaks it up, change the fabric covering often.

When the weather's hot, the kraut may spoil. I like a temperature of about 65 degrees F (19C) best for kraut making, though some say 70.

In about a month, the kraut will stop fermenting. You'll know it because the bubbles will stop coming up in the juice anymore — even when you tap the crock.

You can leave the sauerkraut right in the crock, if you can place it where the temperature remains no higher than 35 degrees and if you'll eat it all up before the end of winter. Otherwise, you should can the sauerkraut following the canning instructions in any cookbook.

Training Coyotes

REGINA (CP) — An education program with a difference has been started in Saskatchewan. It is designed to teach coyotes that little lambs should be seen and not eaten.

The provincial agriculture department is conducting field trials at 20 sites under the direction of Jim Jowsey, a pest and predator control specialist and Don Milligan, the provincial sheep specialist.

Ground mutton, laced with lithium chloride, is wrapped in fresh sheep hide and the bait placed in areas known for high sheep losses to predators.

The coyotes become ill on eating the bait and soon learn to avoid sheep as a food source.

Developed in the United States, studies there show this form of aversive conditioning can reduce coyote predation between 50 and 100 per cent.

The system is relatively inexpensive, although the chemical is not sold to the public, it can be obtained through Dr. Jowsey.

DEAR ABBY: While in church, I saw a woman put a $5 bill in the collection plate and take back $4. Is that considered proper etiquette? — CURIOUS

DEAR CURIOUS: Why not? God knows she put in five.

DEAR ABBY: This is an old story, but I need any help I can get. I fell in love with a married man. I'm married, too. There was no good reason for this, as I have a very nice husband, but nonetheless it is a fact.

I can't respond to my husband sexually, and it is hurting him. Things seem to be completely out of control.

I have tried keeping busy and active, but to no avail. I still wake up at 3 in the morning and toss and turn for hours. Taking an interest in other people is a real challenge. My children are the ones who are suffering most.

It's not necessary to tell me not to see the other man because there is no contact between us now, but I think of him constantly. Also, please don't tell me there must have been something missing in my marriage for this to have happened. I already know that, and it doesn't help.

What I want from your readers is any suggestion that has worked for them.

LOVESICK

DEAR LOVESICK: lovesickness is a "mental disease." It doesn't respond to logic, and what has worked for one may not work for another. You can't kill love with her.

Talking to a therapist is your best bet. Try it. Also forcing thoughts of "him" out of your mind by replacing them with other thoughts helps. And so does time!

DEAR ABBY: I often eat out with friends who seem to gobble their food down. Unfortunately, I wear dentures and must eat more slowly.

It considered bad manners to continue eating after the guests and hostess have finished their meal?

Speaking of New Fashions

—The Streakers Are Here

Look out for streakers when you're cruising this summer.

These are not the bare-buff variety but a new type of sail that began catching on in 1973 and boomed in popularity in the United States the next year.

We Canadians appear to be slow in introducing them into our sail inventories but with American visitors coming here to enjoy our cruising waters they could become part of our boating scene ... at least for some months.

Although I didn't see any being used when we accompanied the Victoria-Maui racers out to Race Rocks on Saturday aboard Lyle and Kay Bell's luxurious Four Bells, sailmaker Burke Sawyer reports most ocean racers have at least one in their sail inventory.

The first time I saw one was in Swiftsure. It was flown by a leading American boat in the Juan de Fuca. As soon as she had popped her spinner out came a complementing colorful streaker to the port side. The last we saw of her the streaker and spinner, plus her main, was speeding her along like a train.

A streaker looks like a tricky sail to trim but well worth that extra effort.

The juniors of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club have a busy weekend ahead of them, hosting and organizing the B.J. Junior Olympics two-handed championships for 16-and-underers.

The top three crews will qualify to race in the Western Canada championships to be held in Calgary next month.

A minimum of five races must be sailed this weekend

Saturday and 9:30 a.m. Sunday.

Nick Thornton is race committee chairman and will be assisted by Jennifer Charlesworth. There will be eight crews competing, two from the Royal Vancouver Yacht Club, two from the West Vancouver Yacht Club, one from the Spring Island Sailing Club, one from the Kitsilano Yacht Club and two from Royal Vic.

Nick's brother Julian will have Richard Dewey for the other Victoria boat will be raced by David Scott, Moncrieff and Kim Hellwig. Racing begins at 10:30 a.m.

but as many as eight could be staged if the weather permits. Racing will be in the club's Flying Juniors.

Patterned after the two being used at the Lester B.

Pearson College of the Pacific,

the boat's engine will be after.

Jennifer estimates it would and buy one. Thanks to many hours of hard work, the budget of around $3,000.

Has VD Driven Amin Crazy?

TEL AVIV (UPI) — An Israeli psychiatrist who treated Idi Amin says the Ugandan leader is suffering from brain damage cause by advanced syphilis.

Dr. Marcel Assael, head of the department of psychiatry at Kaplan Hospital in nearby Rehovoth, said the 50-year-old Ugandan president displays "the classic symptoms of syphilis."

"It's no secret that Idi Amin suffered from the advanced stages of syphilis, which cause brain damage as well as other mental and physical illnesses," Assael said in an interview published today in the Tel Aviv newspaper Yedioth Achronot.

The psychiatrist, a lecturer at Hebrew University in Jerusalem, said he treated Amin from 1969 to 1971 while serving as an adviser to the Ugandan Health Service.

"My man patient was Idi Amin," he said. The psychiatrist said the sys-philis is recorded in Amin's service record as a sergeant in the British army. He said Amin also suffered a serious bone disease, which cause a lack of co-ordination.

"In all respects, Idi Amin is very sick — and not just mentally," he said. "He suffers from a lack of judgment and an inability to reach conclusions that take reality into consideration."

"During his visits he would ask stupid, childlike and confused questions," the doctor said. "He would describe his conversations with God, angels and other voices he heard in the night."

He said Amin constantly seeks self-assurance and tries to build himself up at every opportunity. He surrounds himself with important people to make himself seem more important, according to Assael.

"As compensation for his injured feelings, he has developed 'paranoia,'" the doctor said.

Cheap Food Days Over—Plumptre

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

Consumers in Canada must realize that the days of cheap food are over. Beryl Plumptre, former vice-chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board said in Victoria Thursday.

Plumptre, also the former chairman of the federal Food Prices Review Board, said consumers must get used to the fact that the country is not going to have a "cheap food" policy.

The outspoken food price expert who resigned from her AIB post six weeks ago, stressed that she was not looking for a job in B.C.

Consumer Services Minister Rafe Mair said he invited Plumptre to the province for the day to discuss with him and his staff various alternatives to try to stem the province's rising food prices.

Mair has said earlier his department is considering setting up its own food prices review board, but Plumptre said she has no intention of heading that board, if it is established. "I'm not planning to come out to B.C. permanently," she said.

Mair said he expects to have a recommendation on the issue of food prices, to take to cabinet by Aug. 1.

Plumptre said, she discussed the advantages and disadvantages of food review boards.

Plumptre said there is no such thing as a constant pattern of farm production.

It would have been easier, Plumptre said, if the anti-inflation program had started with a temporary price freeze, rather than selective price monitoring.

Mair said one of the areas his staff is looking into is the reports of Lower Mainland residents driving to Bellingham and Blaine to buy their groceries at cheaper prices.

He said the first step is to figure out why prices are cheaper in the U.S., which, he said, is a complicated process.

S. AFRICAN CONFLICT BREWING

STOCKHOLM (AP) — The growing conflict between black nationalists and the ruling white minority in South Africa may develop into a large-scale international conflict, the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute said in a report published today.

"South Africa and Namibia (South-West Africa) which is governed by South Africa control 25 per cent of the Western world's uranium supplies, which would put South Africa in the same position with uranium as Arab countries have concerning oil," the report said.

"South Africa may turn out to be too valuable for the United States and Western Europe to lose to a nationalist government with the present energy crisis."

South Africa is also strategically situated and is considered to be a check on growing Soviet and Chinese influence in Africa, the report said.

South Africa has the military capacity to handle a large-scale war on its own, the institute's figures on arms trade show.

The country has purchased as many jet fighters, missiles, tanks and ships as all other African countries south of the Sahara since 1960, the figures indicate.

The institute also said that South Africa is building a navy in the Indian Ocean and that the capacity of the Simonstown naval base will be tripled.

Pay Hike Urged For Bus Drivers

PORTE ALBERNI — An arbitration board has recommended wage increases for school board bus drivers and inside workers to bring salaries in line with those paid for similar positions in current IWA agreements.

The two-year contract, with a 9.5 per cent increase in the first year and increases from 9 to 10 per cent in the second year, has been recommended by the board.

The board was set up to resolve the dispute between the Port Alberni school board and Local 727 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, representing some 140 non-teaching staff in the district.

The agreement also calls for a 11-cent an hour increase effective July 1, 1977.

Agreement Expected Soon On Shared Rec Facilities

An agreement on sharing of recreational facilities between the Victoria school board and Oak Bay municipality is expected to be reached within the next few weeks.

School board chairman William Ross said Thursday trustees have accepted in principle an agreement which calls for 600 hours of use within the next few weeks.

Ross was replying to a letter from an Oak Bay resident who charged students had been cut off a swimming program at the Oak Bay Recreation Centre because there was no agreement.

Anne Herbert of 2685 Cawdron representing 200 members of the Willows Parent-Teacher Association called on Ross to "immediately and publicly disclose the reasons why you cannot proceed to resolve this matter so that the parents of Willow school children together with the taxpayers of Oak Bay can determine whether or not you are acting responsibly with respect to this problem."

Ross said the district is trying to negotiate an agreement similar to the ones signed with Saanich and Esquimalt which permits exchange of use rather than dollars.

Negotiations had been going on for several months, Ross said, but Oak Bay council members were initially unwilling to entertain the type of agreement the other two municipalities. But Oak Bay's stand has now been relaxed.

Ross said the approximate value of the swimming programs in Esquimalt and Saanich was $5,000 each.

LONG BEACH, Calif. — Doctors kept a vigil today on Pat Nixon, wife of former president Richard Nixon, partially paralyzed on her left side from a stroke and in "serious but stable condition." She was reported resting comfortably after visits with her two daughters Thursday night, but neurologist Dr. John Mosier said she is far from being out of danger. "If the stroke doesn't get any worse, she's not going to die," said Dr. Mosier at a news briefing called after Mrs.

Nixon, 64, was admitted to Memorial Hospital Medical Centre. The stroke caused
"moderate paralysis" of Mrs.

side of her face, which in turn caused a "slight slurring" of speech, Dr. Mosier said. Pressures in her life "certainly could have been a contributing factor" toward her illness, he added.

Hospital Intern Group Becomes a Trade Union

About 100 residents and interns at St. Paul's Hospital in Vancouver have been granted certification as a trade union and similar certifications are expected at Victoria's two general hospitals.

The ruling by the B.C. Labor Relations Board Thursday, a first in North America, means the student doctors, formerly represented by the Professional Association of Residents and Interns, are now employees of the hospital as well as students.

Their bargaining unit will be able to negotiate salaries and hours of work.

Mike O'Brien, director of employee relations at Victoria General Hospital, said today he anticipates that the separate certification bids made by PARI at each of the province's six teaching hospitals will all likely be approved by the LRB.

In view of the protracted strikes by residents and interns in Britain over such issues as hours of work, O'Brien said he anticipates the landmark ruling by the LRB will likely mean more difficult bargaining lies ahead for the hospitals.

There are about 18 interns and four residents at Jubilee and 10 interns at Victoria General. Other teaching hospitals are Vancouver General, Royal Columbian and Shaughnessy.

There are about 500 members of PARI in B.C. and until recent changes in the Labor Code they could not be recognized as a union and were prohibited from striking. Despite this they conducted a 10-day unofficial strike in March of 1975, hooking off sick.

Heating Oil, Gas Goes Up

OTTAWA (CP) — The price for a gallon of gasoline or home-heating oil will increase by up to a half-cent more than earlier expected as a result of a change July 1 in wellhead prices for crude oil.

Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie had said in May in announcing a $1.05 a barrel crude oil price increase that it would mean an additional 3.8 cents in higher prices for consumers.

But a formal notice Thursday to oil companies indicates they can increase prices by up to 4.3 cents a gallon when a freeze on consumer prices ends Aug. 30.

A department official said the half-cent difference resulted from an adjustment in wellhead prices in Alberta and changes in pipeline tariffs for Interprovincial Pipelines Ltd., the company that moves all western oil used in eastern provinces.

The minister's notice to the companies said an increase of two-tenths of a cent will be allowed to reflect the price adjustments in Alberta.

Under the oil price agreement, the province had been given an average price for its oil of $8 a barrel, rising to $9.05 on July 1.

CLRA Rejects as Tactic Union Back-on-Job Plan

By KIT COLLINS
Times Staff

Construction trade unions on Vancouver Island offered today to resume work during the province-wide lockout to complete construction on top priority schools and hospitals.

But the concession was quickly rejected by the Construction Labor Relations Association.

CLRA president George Wheaton today said the offer was a union tactic aimed at destroying the effectiveness of the lockout.

The B.C. government will appeal a Canadian Transport Commission ruling that Alberta is within its rights to move the head office and overhaul base of Pacific Western Airlines to Alberta, Attorney-General Garde Gardom said today.

Gardom said the province will also seek an injunction restraining PWA from starting the move from Vancouver until the outcome of the appeal is known.

The appeal will be made to the CTC Review Committee which has the power to review all rulings made by the CTC.

The attorney-general said other avenues are still open to the province, such as an appeal to the federal court or the federal cabinet and these areas have not been "touched."

The CTC earlier this week denied B.C.'s application to prevent PWA from moving its 49-member executive staff to Calgary and the 508-member support staff of mechanics, maintenance personnel and office workers to Edmonton.

Afrikaan Wines Return

South African wines will be back on the government liquor store shelves by early August, a spokesman for the Liquor Administration Board said this week.

A freighter is expected to off-load four containers of wine and brandy in Vancouver on July 13. Four more containers should arrive the following week and another four that have just been dispatched out of Capetown ought to reach B.C. shores within two months. Each container contains 1,000 cases.

But whether the Afrikaan products will achieve the same popularity they once had with British Columbians is another matter. For the LAB spokesman said there will be an average 30 per cent price hike on each bottle.

Liquor from South Africa was banned two years ago by the former NDP government in protest over that country's apartheid policy. The ban was lifted by the Social Credit government this spring.

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

British Columbians are enjoying the wines like never before, despite the cost, despite the hard times.

Last year's rate of consumption was equivalent to 10 bottles for every man, woman and child in the province. This year's will probably hit 11, maybe 12 — a full case.

As the popularity of wine drinking has increased so has the appeal for better, quality wines. And that's been good news to foreign vintners.

Between 1972 and 1973 sales of imported wines jumped nearly 50 per cent to 618,000 cases. On the other hand B.C. wine sales edged up only about one per cent to 128,000 cases and other Canadian wines declined about five per cent to 68,000 cases.

Compared with the first four months of 1975, this year's growth rate in sales of imported wines is double the marginal sales increase of domestic products, 10 per cent versus 115 per cent.

Plainly, British Columbians are becoming more discriminating about the wines they drink. And that comes as no surprise to Arnold Ferguson, Victoria area manager for the Liquor Administration Board.

"It has been proven in the past in other countries that as people get more used to drinking wine they gravitate to the drier, quality wines," he says.

Nick Clark, chief purchaser for the LAB suggests another reason for the growing popularity of imported wines. And this may come as surprise to all but the most perceptive connoisseur.

Prices on about 100 imported wines actually dropped this year, the decrease brought about by the NDP-initiated price freeze and a strengthening of the Canadian dollar abroad.

Clark says when this year's orders were put in last fall suppliers were told by the government that because of the price freeze, it would not pay any more than a two per cent increase. It was a take-it-or-leave-it proposition and nearly every supplier agreed to go along with it.

The increase was not passed on to consumers but absorbed by the LAB. That meant instead of getting 117 per cent profit on imported wines (the profit level set by government order-in-council), the LAB had to be satisfied with 115 per cent.

It didn't last long. With the devaluation of currencies in France, Italy, Spain, Germany and Portugal — the top five wine exporters to B.C. — the profits were pushed back to their old level and in some cases above.

Because the law prohibits the LAB from charging more than 117 per cent profit on each bottle of imported wines, an adjustment had to be made to the prices of certain brands, to the benefit of the consumer.

In a Times survey of Greater Victoria residents, wine-tasters, managers of three government liquor stores indicated foreign brands were the biggest sellers among the still wines.

Gamza, from Bulgaria, Yago, from Spain, and the Italian product, Bifino, were considered the most popular red wine choices. Hemes, also Bulgarian, Yago, Grivesac from France and German wines such as Bille-Danube headed the list of favored white wines. All are priced from $2.25 to $4.

That's not to say Canadian wines aren't popular. Indeed, they account for two-thirds of all wine sold in the province. But their popularity vis-a-vis imported varieties seems to vary from store to store.

For instance at the Esquimalt and Tillicum stores locally produced sparkling wines — "pop wines" — far outsell their imported counterparts.

Not so at the Fort and Foul Bay store. There, according to manager Stan Hiscock, pop wines aren't the big sellers they once were. Now, when a person contemplates something bubbly he'll reach for Mateus or Faisea, light Portuguese wines, before a bottle of Cadet or Baby Duck.

Comparisons between stores can be invidious because the difference is more than geographic, more than the social mix of people who patronize one store over another. Much depends on variety of stock offered for sale.

Unlike the other two stores, the one at Fort and Foul Bay is an all-brand store. It carries the full galaxy of wines listed by the LAB.

Hiscock feels customers exposed to such a wide range of choices are invariably tempted to try something different.

Still, it takes a bold individual with plenty of spare cash to indulge in the very best — a bottle of Chambolle Musigny at $14.95, Chateau Mouton at $13.20, Meursault at $11.45, or the piece de resistance, Dom Perignon champagne which at $25.15 works out to more than $1 an ounce.

Vic Woodland, general manager of the LAB says of the 200,000 to 300,000 different kinds of wine produced throughout the world, only a tiny fraction, something in the order of 700 to 800, are imported for sale here.

The competition among foreign vintners to gain a piece of the B.C. market is at times intense. And once a wine is accepted, it has to sell ... or it's delisted. That's what happened to the Australian Penfold wines earlier this year when they failed to achieve their sales quota set by the LAB.

Notwithstanding the grousing one hears over soaring liquor prices, Woodland believes wine prices in B.C. are reasonable.

The other solution is the simplest: just abstain.

But it would appear there are few people in British Columbia these days prepared to go quite that far.

Developers in 'Middle'

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

The head of a small development company with land at Triangle Mountain said Thursday he and other developers are stuck in the middle of a fight between regional and provincial governments over planning control.

Norman Sewell, president of Dobraden Holdings Ltd., 5782 Oldfield Rd., was responding to comments by Jim Campbell

bell, chairman of the Capital Region Board, who said the board will continue efforts to freeze subdivision development over about 1,500 acres in the Colwood area until new regional planning regulations come into effect eight or nine months from now.

At present the provincial highways department is the agency which must approve subdivision plans in unorganized areas such as Colwood.

The regional board — has failed twice this year to persuade Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis to institute or allow a temporary development freeze in the area.

The board is afraid the half dozen developers holding land there will meet less restrictive highway department standards and launch uncoordinated housing schemes, destroying regional plans for an area-wide sewage system and such features as balanced greenbelts.

Sewell, who said he is not a professional developer, owns 27 acres off Bexhill Road, part of Triangle Mountain, where he wants to subdivide and sell 35 lots.

He said he is further ahead with his plans than the other developers in the area, in fact they have been approved by the highways department.

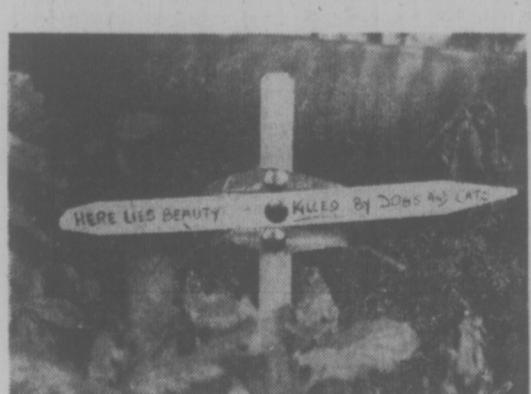

He has been waiting to see the fate of the proposed regional land freeze bylaw and on that it has been rejected by Curtis, he will go ahead.

Land in the Triangle Mountain Improvement District has been zoned for residential development for about seven years, Sewell said. If anyone is impeding progress it's the regional board, waiting seven years until the zoning is being utilized and then attempting to freeze development, he claimed.

A newspaper article in 1889, the time the second picture was done, said "a copy should adorn the walls of every office, store and residence in Victoria, while it is invaluable for the purpose of conveying to parties at a distance an accurate idea of the Queen City of the west."

Two feet by three feet posters of the earlier picture are available at the museum gift shop for $4 and half-sized reproduction of the 1889 view sell for $2.

Two Injured When Car Hits Pole

Look-Alike Police Car Leads to Court Action

A 27-year-old man, charged with impersonating a police officer was remanded to July 16 to set a date for trial after appearing in Victoria provincial court this morning.

John Robert Malleck, of 547 Niagara, had pleaded not guilty to the charge Thursday.

Malleck was also charged this morning with operating a vehicle equipped with unauthorized lamps, a traffic offence carrying a normal penalty of a $25 fine.

The charges stemmed from what he wanted to be a policeman but couldn't because he didn't meet the height requirement, and considered his vehicle "a show car."

Police said Malleck told

When the traffic offence notice was read out in court today Malleck shot back "But there were no bulbs in them (the lamps) ... they can't possibly work."

The judge asked him if he wanted legal counsel.

"Do you think that's a good idea?" Malleck replied.

He was referred to legal aid.

However, legal aid duty counsel John Stowell told him he didn't qualify and referred him to three lawyers who may take the case for a nominal fee.

The RCMP checked it six times in B.C. and they looked through their books and couldn't find anything," he said. "I never got charged until I got here."

What's more, said Malleck, one group of RCMP officers stopped him in B.C. and "even had their picture taken in front of the car."

Police said Malleck told

During Thursday's court appearance, Malleck told Judge Fred Green that he (Malleck) had been stopped, 31 times as he drove his car from Ontario to Victoria in May to accept a job at Camosun College.

The RCMP checked it six times in B.C. and they looked through their books and

Guards' Force Reasonable —Ombudsman

By DON VIOND

EDMONTON (CP) — Guards at the nearby Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Institute were cleared Thursday by Alberta Ombudsman Dr. Randall Ivany of using excessive force in a prison riot May 30 which left four prisoners injured.

Prisoners alleged they were brutally beaten by guards even though they were not involved in the disturbance at the correctional institute.

In an 18-page report released Thursday, Dr. Ivany said:

"My investigation satisfies me that no excessive force was used against the inmates by the tactical squad."

But he called on jail authorities to grant six major requests from prisoners to relieve tension at the over-crowded facility.

In an interview later, Dr. Ivany said similar violent outbreaks would continue to occur until remand prisoners were found accommodation away from prisoners serving sentences.

It's research which begins with the brain and the first thing you need reminding is that the brain is divided in two, a right and a left hemisphere.

In case you think you're beginning to understand, wait a minute. The left ear connects to the right hemisphere and the right just rested there in reserve. Earlier in this century researchers concluded the right hemisphere did have some chores, the processing of musical sounds and space concepts, for example.

The left hemisphere handles language, things done in sequence like speech, reading and writing, probably mathematics.

Johnson said Thursday the current theory is that both hemispheres work in cooperation and what he's trying to do is explore how they get along together.

In case you think you're beginning to understand, wait a minute. The left ear connects to the right hemisphere and the right just rested there in reserve. Earlier in this century researchers concluded the right hemisphere did have some chores, the processing of musical sounds and space concepts, for example.

Johnson suggests that is because music they were not just listening, they were analyzing. Thus they were using the left hemisphere.

Now for left-handers:

He says they appear to be less "lateralized," meaning the various brain functions aren't tucked quite so much into left or right compartments. The evidence suggests they handle music and speech, for example, in both hemispheres.

Does this sort of research have any place in the real world?

Johnson says trying to figure out how the brain functions is difficult because you can't go in and watch; you have only the behavior which comes out to measure.

But it's also important when it comes to helping children with learning disabilities, for example, or people who have suffered a stroke or brain damage in an accident.

Not being able to talk after a lifetime of speech is a devastating experience for a stroke victim, he says.

If psychologists knew more about how the brain works, they might be able to help victims cope better with these kinds of problems. They might even be able to help them switch a task normally done by one hemisphere to the other if the first was damaged.

If that sounds unlikely, consider this item of research evience: a greater proportion of left-handed people who suffer strokes recover their speech.

Could that be because they don't store all their cerebral talents in one hemisphere?

Mountain Slope Site For Highland Games

On Saturday, July 10 at noon, Channel 9 will present the Grandfather Mountain Highland Games. The Highland Games, in the form in which they are practiced today, have their roots in the ancient clan system of Northern Scotland. They have become one of the most colorful and popular events of this type in the United States.

The Games were begun in 1956 and are held annually on MacRae Meadows, high on the slopes of Grandfather Mountain, an area that bears a close resemblance to Scotland itself.

Entertainment includes the classic music of the highland bagpipes, the dancing of the highland fling, the sword dance, and scottish dances.

Athletic events include the tossing of the caber, a long tree truck, which must somersault and land on an exact line with the thrower's run up; tossing the sheaf which consists of using an ordinary hay fork to pick up and toss a sheaf of whines, heather, or hay over a cross bar. The bar is raised after each contestant has completed his throws.

Other events are the shot put, the hop, step and jump (triple jump), the pole vault, throwing the hammer, wrestling, fencing, archery, tug of war, the marathon and weight throwing which includes three events — throwing 28 pounds and 56 pounds for distance, and throwing 56 pounds for height.

CBS Sports to Air Pepsico Grand Slam

Arthur Ashe, Manuel Orantes, Bjorn Borg, and the 1976 Wimbledon champion, yet to be decided, compete for $75,000 first-prize money when the inaugural Pepsico Grand Slam of tennis is broadcast by CBS Sports, Saturday, July 10 (3:30 p.m.) and Sunday, July 11 (12:30 p.m.) on the CBS Television Network.

Pat Summerall and U.S. Davis Cup captain Tony Traver will cover the action for CBS Sports at Myrtle Beach Tennis Club in South Carolina

Women's Open Saturday

Live coverage of the 1976 U.S. Women's Open Golf Championship will be televised on Channel 4 Saturday at 12:30 p.m. and Sunday at 1:30 p.m.

Another major event to be covered Saturday by ABC will be the final round of the British Open Golf Championship, the third leg of golf's Grand Slam, at 4:30 p.m. on Channel 4.

OLYMPIAD—THE CANADIANS—High jumper Debbie Brill, one of Canada's Olympic hopefuls, talks with director John Stoneman during the filming of The Canadians, to be aired Sunday, July 11, on Channel 8 at 9 p.m. The program documents the training, planning and preparation of a great number of Canadian athletes toward the ultimate goal of winning Olympic medals for Canada in Montreal.

Plant Expert to Visit Great Cape Cod Dunes

Plant expert Thalassa Cruso takes viewers on a most unusual tour of the great dunes, forests and swamps of Cape Cod on Beyond Sand Dunes, Sunday, July 11 at 5:00 p.m. on Public TV 9.

Thalassa, who recalls that her first impression of the natural world was a memory of tall dark dunes, has always been fascinated by the power of natural forces: this fascination has led her to the magical dunes and grasses of the Massachusetts' coastal area.

Frightened by the dunes as a baby, yet moved and inspired as an adult, Thalassa weaves a tale of myth, mystery, and power as she describes the desolate breathtaking dunes—their destructive and protective nature, the slow transition from beach sand to plants, from shrubs to forest.

Bailey and Drummer On Evening at Pops

Couples—and ex-couples—join together again in the next two episodes of Evening at Pops.

Sunday, July 11 at 8 p.m., Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra welcome Pearl Bailey and her drummer-husband Louis Bellson. Ms. Bailey starts her magic with Smile, develops the mood with Cabaret, and then changes it with a classic blues number, Tired. She then turns the spotlight over to Bellson, for the wild beautiful number, Carney Street. The beat goes back to Pearl for a couple of encores—including Hello, Dolly!! The Boston Pops contribute Sousa's El Capitan March, Dvorak's Overture to Carneval, and selections from the Broadway musical "Oklahoma!"

A Sense of Place

Habitat Film on TV 9

A Sense of Place, a film which examines the human settlement problems around the world while trying to discover the commonalities which people share, will be presented on Public TV 9, Sunday, July 11 at 4:00 p.m.

This film was co-produced by the National Film Board of Canada and the Canadian Habitat Secretariat to coincide with the United Nations Conference on Human Settlement (Habitat) recently held in Vancouver.

housing in Singapore, and reconstruction in Warsaw.

As the producer Roman Bittman points out, "The film is not meant only to list human settlement issues and answers

... We wanted to discover the commonalities, the things that people share ... to show and credit effort — positive examples to indicate directions for future action." Most of all the filmmakers wanted to "acknowledge the dignity of individuals and their efforts; to give a tribute to the ingenuity and energy of people to solve their own dilemmas ... when given the opportunity to do so."

In designing the film for Habitat, Bittman wanted to "remind the experts and officials of the various countries that the gathering is not about things — structures of concrete or new designs for the physical environment though these things are important too — but it is about people — about human concerns such as happiness, hope, culture, traditions, family relationships, and community."

Music Generates Laserlight Color

Camera Three presents, for the first time on television, Listen With Your Eyes Laser Music, a performance of Aleksandr Scriabin's Prometheus: The Poem of Fire, with co-ordinated laserlight color effects generated by the music itself, Sunday, July 11 (10:30 a.m.) on channel 12.

Scriabin, the mystical Russian composer (1872-1915), who is now something of a cult figure, wrote "The Poem of Fire," his fifth symphony, in 1909. As the first music ever composed calling for the projection of colored lights, it was far ahead of its time, and only recently has it become performable according to Scriabin's conception.

Romantic Rebellion Returning

Television's favorite art historian, Lord Kenneth Clark reappears on CBC-TV this summer in a repeat run of The Romantic Rebellion, Sundays at 1 p.m. The network first carried the British-produced series in the summer of 1974, but Canadian audiences were already familiar with Lord Clark through his brilliant BBC series, Civilisation, which had two exposures on CBC-TV.

Urban Life Examined

The quality of community and urban life and what can be done to improve it, which was the theme of a recent major United Nations conference on human settlements, referred to as Habitat, will be the subject of a discussion on a special CBS News religious broadcast, The Whole of Life, on Sunday, July 11 at 8:30 a.m., on channel 12.

Habitat was held from May 30 through June 11 in Vancouver, and was the largest of a series of special United Nations conferences, which began in Stockholm in 1972, on the environment, followed in 1974 by the World Food Conference in Rome, then by one in Mexico City in 1975 marking International Women's Year.

Nova Looks at Trees

Nova travels from the forest of the Northwest to the tree farms of the Southeast to explore the possibility of The Renewable Tree, Tuesday, July 13 at 7:30 p.m. on Public TV 9.

In the South, trees are grown as a crop: strains have been developed that respond well to the establishment of tree farms and to the development of "super strains." Scientists think that they might be able to keep pace with the growing demand for paper products.

The trees in the Northwest, however, are mostly used as lumber. Lumber demands older trees — trees that cannot be mass produced in quick growing farms. If the old trees continually are cut to meet lumber needs, soon they will vanish. Trees in the Northwest are a mined, non-renewable resource.

But timber companies have developed some methods for increasing their yield, including computerized thinning and cutting operations and the development of composit products. But although these new products are more efficient and use less wood, their invention has increased the market for wood.

ANSWER ON PAGE NINE

Convention Coverage Begins

Comprehensive live coverage of the Democratic national convention in New York City will be provided Monday, July 12, on channels 4, 5 and 12. (See program for time schedule.)

Correspondent Walter Cronkite will anchor CBS News coverage from inside the convention hall at each site. National Correspondent Eric Sevareid will provide analysis of convention proceedings, as will Political Consultant Théodore H. White. And this year, a new addition to the CBS News team, Correspondent Bill Moyers, will report on activities at the rostrum. The Democratic National Convention starts Monday in Madison Square Garden, and is scheduled to close on Thursday, July 15.

The Republican National Convention is scheduled for Monday, August 16, through Thursday, August 19, at the Kemper Arena.

"For the first time, in our reporting of national political conventions, CBS News coverage will be all-electronic," said Robert Chandler, vice-president and executive-in-charge of Campaign '76. CBS News plans to employ about 30 of its own electronic cameras at sites inside and outside the convention halls and in the four mobile flash units traversing the convention cities.

This switchover to electronic camera coverage, with its inherent flexibility, is an aspect of the CBS news gathering operation we have been refining in recent years," Chandler said. "We expect that it will greatly enhance the quality and the timeliness of our convention coverage."

In addition to reporting the actual convention proceedings, CBS News will cover all related substantive proceedings and will report developments at party and candidate headquarters, demonstration areas and other points throughout the city.

Supplementing this extensive coverage of convention activities and reports on these activities on regularly scheduled news broadcasts, CBS News will also provide hour-long Campaign '76 special reports from 7-8 P.M. on the Sundays immediately preceding and immediately following each convention. CBS News Correspondent Walter Cronkite will anchor these special reports.

CBC-TV To Air New Series

Gordon Craig, head of sports for CBC-TV, has announced the completion of a contract with International Management Group, Canada, for the sponsorship and telecasting of a new series, the Canadian Superstars.

The Canadian series joins the already established programs being telecast in the United States, Europe, Britain, Japan and a number of other spots throughout the world, to become a part of the International Superstars series.

There are 10 events in the competition. They are: rowing, tennis, swimming, weightlifting, bowling (10 pins), baseball hitting, 100-yard dash, one-half mile run, one-mile cycle, and the obstacle course. Each athlete must compete in seven events. The choice is his, but no athlete may compete in his professional specialty.

Canadian athletes who will appear on the new series are: Daryl Sittler of the Toronto Maple Leafs, Peter Maholich of the Montreal Canadiens, Mark Napier of the Toronto Toros, Marcel Dionne of the Los Angeles Kings, Jim Young of the B.C. Lions, Terry Evansham of the Hamilton Tiger-Cats, Zeon Andrusyshyn of the Toronto Argonauts, Tony Gabriel of the Ottawa Rough Riders, George Athans, Canada's all-time top water-skier, Clyde Gray, Canadian and British Commonwealth welter-weight boxing champion, Wayne Wong, world free-style skiing champion, Jamie Paulson, nine-time Canadian badminton champion.

The Canadian Superstars will be telecast as a part of CBC-TV's new half-time concept, during the 1976 Canadian football league coverage.

In making the announcement, Craig said, "This association with IMG and its international series of superstars programs will give our Canadian athletes a chance to show their abilities against the best in the world. We are proud to afford this opportunity to our athletes and to bring his highly successful programming concept to our many viewers throughout Canada."

Basketball Deal Made by CBS

Exclusive broadcast rights to National Basketball Association games on the CBS Television Network for two more years, starting with the 1976-77 season, were announced jointly by Barry Frank, Vice President, CBS Sports, and Lawrence F. O'Brien, Commissioner of the NBA. Under the agreement, the Network will broadcast a minimum of 37 games each year, including the NBA All-Star Game.

Daytime TV Desperate For Changes of Form

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The presence of some long-running soap operas and the absence of the kind of hoopla that surrounds night-time program changes gives the impression that little ever changes in daytime television.

But take a look. In the last 16 months:

- The 30-minute mould that nearly every program was cast in has been broken. Three serials now provide a full hour of heart throbs apiece every day and The Price Is Right also runs 60 minutes.

- All in the Family, long the No. 1 series at night, currently has become the No. 1 daytime show.

- NBC has introduced a game show with singing and dancing and a TV equivalent of the Dear Abby newspaper column, with celebrities participating.

The rapid comings and goings are in part representative of the feverish competition that has always existed in daytime television. But some network executives also believe they reflect a demand by the audience for something other than the conventional soap operas and game shows.

"Daytime is crying out for new forms," says Michael Eisner, head of program development at ABC. "We have to be careful that we don't bore the audience to death."

Daytime ratings don't show terminal boredom setting in, but Eisner and others at NBC and CBS say they sense a feeling of unrest in the audience — no doubt caused in part by the proliferation of syndicated game shows in the early evening hours. Those in the evening and during the day are lumped together when people complain about too many game shows on TV.

So the networks are making efforts to provide something different. Madeline Bloom David, chief of daytime programming at NBC, believes lengthening some serials to an hour was one such step. It didn't create a new form but it does allow "more exploration, more incisive characterizations, more dimension."

She said NBC also had its eye on doing something different when it developed The Fun Factory, a new game show in which the contests spring from songs, dances and comedy sketches, and Take My Advice, the program in which celebrities answer questions from the audience on how to handle personal problems.

More changes may be on the way, although no one is suggesting that the over-all daytime look will be altered drastically.

ABC is trying a daily half-hour variety show this summer, featuring Don Ho and a regular contingent of entertainers chatting and performing at Ho's nightclub in Hawaii.

Ms. David, as she prefers to be called, says NBC is interested in developing a comedy-flavored soap opera.

CBS is flirting with the idea, too, says the head of that network's daytime department, Bud Grant.

NBC also is looking into presenting a period soap opera — although what period David won't reveal. "There's not much that is taboo now but how about a time when adultery and divorce were strongly condemned by society?"

Grant, for one, is skeptical of much of this professed experimenting.

"The number of forms that have worked in daytime over 25 years of programming is really quite limited in comparison with the number that have worked in night-time," he says.

"That makes it difficult to come up with very many variations."

"Game shows, serials and an occasional rerun of a prime-time series are the forms that historically have worked in daytime. Not because the networks have any personal stake in those forms, but because they hold up — they are producible."

"Doing 260 half-hour programs a year requires a form that is producible," he continued. "Game shows and the serial are the two forms of original programs that are producible with any degree of quality."

David says that's what NBC discovered when it tried out the David Steinberg variety show last December. The network quickly saw that the interview segments merely duplicated other programs, and the comedy routines couldn't reach the level audiences had been conditioned to expect by the big-budget prime-time programs such as The Carol Burnett Show.

Jacksons Stick To 30 Minutes

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If anyone ever needed an hour to showcase their talent in a TV variety show one would think it would be the performer-packed Jackson family.

"We were offered an hour but we decided to do half an hour," says Michael Jackson, 17, who soared to fame six years ago as lead singer of the Jackson Five.

"We'd rather just give them (the audience) a little — make them want more. Then they'll be ready for us next week."

The Jackson family was offered a weekly television series by ABC two years ago but Michael says they turned it down because they were too busy recording and touring to devote themselves to a one-hour TV show each week.

They still are, he says another reason for the 30-minute format. The family taped the four CBS summer shows — the second of which airs tonight — in less than three weeks.

The five oldest sons of Joe and Katherine Jackson entered the national musical scene in 1970 with a string of records that hit the top of the sales charts and ended the days when their father had to operate a crane in a Gary, Ind., steel mill.

The original group consisted of Michael, Jackie, now 25, Tito, 22, Jermaine, 20, and Marlon, 19. Brother Randy, 14, joined them on the concert circuit in 1973 and the three girls — Rebbie, 26, La Toya, 20, and Janet, 10 — followed in 1974.

Only Jermaine is not in the summer series. Michael says he was busy recording a solo album when they taped the shows.

Their father, the primary musical influence on the children, also got involved by serving as an executive producer. But their mother who played clarinet in high school, would have none of it, Michael says.

"We couldn't push her up there. She just sits in the audience and claps."

CBC-Radio Shows Sold in Australia

The CBC's International Relations department has sold a number of CBC Radio programs to the Australian Broadcasting Commission. The programs are scheduled to be aired on Australia's new FM network, which opened in January this year.

Three of the programs are documentaries by Glenn Gould—Stokowski: A Portrait for Radio, first broadcast on CBC Radio in February 1971; Casals: A Portrait for Radio, first aired in January 1974; and Schoenberg: The First Hundred Years—A Documentary Fantasy, broadcast in November 1974 for the composer's centennial. The three programs are scheduled for April and May broadcasts in Australia.

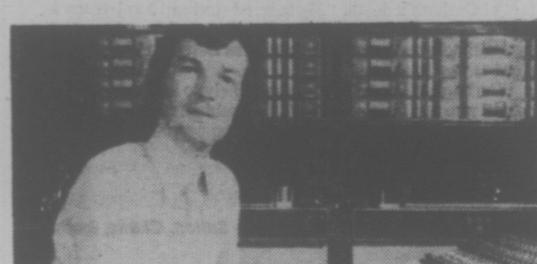

Writer's Heartbeat In Musical Show

CBC Radio listeners will hear writer Douglas Byers' heartbeat across the country on July 11, (7:03 p.m. on a.m. Network). Byers, who wrote and conceived the Olympic musical So Hard to Be So Strong had his heartbeat recorded as part of the sound effects for the production.

The sound of Byers' heartbeat is mixed with the sounds of track runners and internal and external breathing which are blended into textured musical exchanges and songs explaining athletes' feelings and sensations during competition. The overall effect is designed to bring the listener's awareness closer to that of an Olympic athlete in competition through a "visual sound" concept.

A graduate of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute in Radio and Television Arts Byers also wrote Emperor Norton, another original musical broadcast June 27 as part of CBC Radio's salute to the U.S. Bicentennial. His other credits include a profile of the O'Connor Sisters for CBC Radio and subsequently presented on CBC-TV's Musicamera series. Next season CBC-TV will present another Byers' original starring Maureen Forrester.

Once More With Love is a collection of some 40-odd short pieces about various kinds of love. Many of them were originally written for Joan Sutton's daily column in the Toronto Star, or broadcast over her syndicated radio show. Writing that is aimed at meeting deadlines can have its drawbacks. For every profundity there are likely to be a dozen clichés, which insist on coming to mind much quicker than original thoughts, and there's little time to spend on pruning out the deadwood and polishing up what's left.

But writing that's done with an eye on the clock also tends to be honest, straightforward and clear, if Joan Sutton's work can be taken as a fair example. (See her prose poem "Tale Without a Moral" as a case in point; it is under 80 lines long and manages to contain, in that brief space, the essence of a particular man-woman relationship.)

If Once More With Love can be said to have a unifying theme, it is that love is "a word . . . vastly overused and greatly underworked." Joan Sutton believes in commitment — to love itself, as well as to those whom we love. Her life's ambition, she claims, is to be a "loving woman"; she sees this as a harder goal to achieve than "to be rich or famous, beautiful, worthy, educated, witty or any of the other labels that a more worldly person might covet."

The majority of the pieces in this book deal with sexual love, but several of them are about children, pets and friends. "Parenthood is a self-defeating job. The better you do it, the more quickly your child grows . . . independent," she will say, or "as of right now, one of my careers has come to an end. I am no longer the mother of a newspaper carrier."

One piece describes her plan to prepare an invitation list for her funeral, so that her will "be surrounded only by loving friends. And friendly lovers." Another instructs the reader in the "gentle art of flirtation: All good flirting is an end in itself, not the beginning of something else."

Read all of one sitting, Once More With Love is almost certain to seem repetitious and cloying. But in smaller doses it should have wide appeal for readers who prefer to do their thinking with their hearts.

Betty Kennedy's Gerhard, A Love Story, is also a book about love by a well-known radio (and television) personality, but its origin is worlds away from Once More With Love. Betty's husband, Gerhard Kennedy, died of cancer after a nine months' illness in December, 1975. After his death she simply sat at her typewriter one day and began writing it all down, partly, one suspects, as a constructive reaction to her own grief, and partly for the sake of others who are facing the challenge and problem of death.

She begins with their last holiday together, when her husband first began to show signs of ill-health. She describes their visits to various doctors and the decision to try radiation treatments rather than surgery. She describes Gerhard's determination to keep on going, their brief summer vacation cut short by pain and further tests which only brought more bad news, and their gradual acceptance of what would inevitably follow.

Together the Kennedys planned a September service of thanksgiving with their family and friends and chose a burial site in the Gatineau Hills. They arranged for a headstone. Gerhard said his good-byes to everyone near to him; he gave Betty a farewell gift of a brand new car (it contained a tape deck and tape music from the films he had produced), and he went into hospital at the end of October and died there, five weeks later.

Gerhard, A Love Story is, of course, a book about the fact of death. But it's also, in the truest possible sense, a book about the vitality of love. The love which the Kennedys shared with each other and with their children and friends was (and is) at least as real a presence in their lives as the fact of Gerhard's death. "My beloved Gerhard has left me a legacy of strength, courage, and pure wonder at life. And that will help me to survive," declares Betty Kennedy at the close of her book.

Gerhard, A Love Story, is most likely to be read by older people who are concerned with the problem of death. But it should be required reading for all young people who need to know how to live while there's still time.

All About Vancouver

By MIKE GRAHAM

Two more different books on a single subject — Vancouver — could hardly be imagined than Barry Broadfoot's coffee-table picture book and Chuck Davis' densely packed information extravaganza.

By far the most intriguing is by Davis, who was the general editor and all-round put-together of The Vancouver Book.

Packed with items about almost — but not all — conceivable facts relating to the Greater Vancouver area, Davis' opus is the Whole Earth Catalogue reduced to metropolitan proportions.

It's really a book for and about Vancouverites, but anyone else who wonders how the city and environs ticks should love it.

The size of a coffee table book, it is bound like a paperback and the pages are really nothing better than good quality newsprint.

And that's all the better, for this is a book made for thumbing through, for stopping at any page and reading up on some odd bit of information. The thing is really a telephone book of facts, rather than names, and sprinkled liberally with black-and-white pictures, line drawings and maps. Davis is a sort of a minor renaissance man in the media field about Vancouver. He has worked for the CBC as an announcer, covered cowboy music for the Sun, worked for the news side of Channel 8, and most recently was top dog on a popular late afternoon CBC radio program. He quit his radio chores at its height to plunge into organizing The Vancouver Book.

Vancouver's social planning department commissioned his project — and city ratepayers have been well rewarded.

The book spans 600 pages on everything from nudist societies to a history of street names.

Wrote Davis in his introduction: "I am now settling down to hear from people who will: 1) ask why we didn't mention — ; 2) ask why we did mention — ; 3) tell us we spelled — wrong; 4) scold us for not writing enough about — , especially since we gave so much space to — ; 5) inform us that we have the details on — all wrong, and so on."

But as Davis says, the book is not carved in stone.

As for the first try, all I can say is: Great.

On the other hand, The City of Vancouver is much like one would expect. Time for a coffee-table type book on Van-cover — so the publishers have done one.

They've hired a former city reporter, Barry Broadfoot, who writes well enough to stitch the 180 photos — 116 of them in color — together. Fred Herzog does much of the photography, although there are others spread throughout the glossy pages.

"We mentioned rain. Does Vancouver have much?" writes Broadfoot. "Do birds fly? Of course it rains in Vancouver."

Well, you'd hardly know it from the photos. Like most of these productions, almost all of the pictures are taken in bright summer sunlight.

Ah, if Vancouver was only like that.

As Donald Stainsby writes in Davis' The Vancouver Book: "Rain dominates Vancouver. To understand the city you must study rain and its variants, wet snow and fog. Rain affects the life of the whole city. Even the absence of rain is notable . . ."

Now, that's the Vancouver we all know.

Man's Internal Police Force

By JULIAN REID

In the days of Hippocrates, some 2,400 years ago, the physician's role was very different than it is today. Hospitals were cheerful places, redolent with sweet breezes, where flute-players strolled between fragrant-smoking censors — the aim was to lull patients out of their distress, so they could relax into a state of well-being wherein their ailing bodies could set about healing themselves.

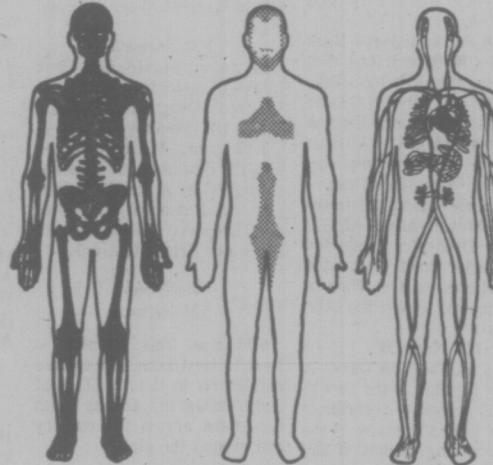

Today, things are different. We display little faith in our innate recuperative powers; instead, we turn unthinkingly to the awesome array of treatments that modern medical science provides. Yet the real essence of medicine has changed little since Hippocrates' time. "To cure a disease, not just treat it," Dr. Ronald J. Glasser reminds us, "you must help the body to do it itself. It is the body that is the hero, not science, not antibiotics, not machines or new devices."

The Body Is the Hero is a lucid and utterly fascinating introduction to the human "immune system" — the internal police force which guards us against microbes and other hostile invaders. It has taken over a billion years for this system to evolve; its beginnings can be traced back to the primordial seas that supported the flickering molecules of proto-life which were our earliest ancestors. Then, as today, it was life-eat-life; only the fittest survived to pass their powers of resistance on to their descendants.

"Life is still what it always has been, a battle of molecules, of our own chemistry against the invaders." But only in the present century have we begun to understand the mechanisms of this age-old warfare; and only in the last generation have we achieved sufficient insight to kindle renewed respect for our body's awesome capacity to defend itself.

Before that, the focus was almost entirely on the invading bacteria. The bacteriological approach dominated medicine, becoming "a new dogma, a new tyranny," from which physician and patient were hard-pressed to extricate themselves. It was an age of little faith in Man's natural self-healing powers.

In this regard, many doctors are a generation behind the times — still obsessed with so-called wonder-drugs to the point of forgetting the limited role they actually play in healing. "Antibiotics only buy time. They hold organisms in check, they retard their growth, they may even kill a few, but in the end it is the body itself that must destroy what organisms are left, must clean up the battlefield, seek out and destroy that last final microbe."

But the focus is shifting. "Medically speaking," says Glasser, "we are living today in the age of immunology." Once again, physicians are coming to realize that their role is to supplement and reinforce their patients' self-healing capacities, rather than attempt to take over and usurp their natural functions.

Meanwhile, researchers are beginning to make headway in understanding and treating the once-baffling "auto-immune diseases," in which the immune system turns on the body's own tissues. Familiar examples are hay fever, rheumatic fever, and rheumatoid arthritis — not to mention some kinds of anemia and perhaps also multiple sclerosis. Immunology may even hold the long-sought key to the secret of cancer, which usually takes root only after the immune system, which appears to be a natural safeguard against it, has been significantly weakened.

All this and much more is treated in detail by Glasser, with an enthusiasm it would be tactless to label "infectious." For The Body Is the Hero is above all a bracingly healthy reaffirmation of the basic principle of Hippocratic medicine: "We are as much a part of our diseases as we are of our health. The task of the physician today is what it has always been, to help the body to heal itself."

Lindbergh: The Riddle of a Split Life

By JACK SCOTT

George S. Kaufman and John P. Marquand were collaborating on a drama version of Marquand's novel, "The Late George Apley", when the name of Charles A. Lindbergh chanced to surface.

Both Marquand and his wife had appeared with Lindbergh on the America First Committee which preceded the United States' entry into the Second World War. Kaufman, on the other hand, a Jew, had reason to despise Lindbergh, whose enthusiasm for the Nazis had brought him beyond the brink of anti-Semitism.

Kaufman, who had forgiven Marquand for his "eccentricity," asked the novelist, "Why do you associate with people like the Lindberghs?" Marquand thought for a moment and replied, "George, you've got to remember that all heroes are horses asses."

True or not—and the weight of evidence certainly favors Marquand's cynicism—Charles A. Lindbergh was an almost classic example of the enigmatic man and this biography, imperfect though it may be, rehashes the abundance of fact and memory that "The Lone Eagle" managed to be both admirable and contemptible.

This is, in fact, the strength and the weakness of Leonard Mosley's new book. A competent enough journalist, Mosley offers a well-researched chronological account of Lindbergh's life and times, but there is a vacuum of new or fresh insights into the curious schizophrenia of his subject. The reader will find no ready answer here to the continuing speculation of whether Lindbergh was a child-like, direct character with a one-track mind or an immensely complicated man—or, perhaps, a little of both.

The heroic side of Lindbergh has been documented before, notably in "We", in which, with a professional collaborator, he cashed in on the sensation of his trans-Atlantic flight of 1927, and in his much-later, more reflective book, "The Spirit of St. Louis," still a powerful account of his contradictory life and outlook.

If Mosley is content to let the facts speak for themselves rather than to explain or rationalize the Lindbergh psyche, it must be admitted that he has a remarkable story in these biographical details alone, readable and engrossing for the younger reader and bringing back some indelible memories for the older.

Like John F. Kennedy's assassination, no adult can forget the impact of Lindbergh's solo crossing of an ocean (this reviewer LINDBERGH: A Biography, by Leonard Mosley. Doubleday. $14.95.

An enduring moment of triumph remembers vividly, playing tennis as a teenager, when a boy came running across the courts, crying "Lindy made it! Lindy made it!") and much of that ancient excitement is recaptured in this book.

Looking back on it, it's odd, perhaps, that this event should have made such an impact. After all, the Atlantic had been crossed by airplane in 1919 when John Alcock and Arthur Brown flew from Newfoundland to Ireland, though the distance was under 2,000 miles as opposed to Lindbergh's 3,400-mile "hop." But Mosley puts into perspective the circumstances that made that solo crossing, a full eight years later, such an enduring moment of triumph.

"In the lawdry world of 1927," he writes, "the bright sparks of the jazz age generation, in between boozing their way through the last months of the boom years, were apt to make overnight heroes of anyone who squatted longer on a pole, swallowed more goldfish or gorged more frankfurters than anyone else had done before.

"And now suddenly they were confronted by the real thing, a genuine hero, who looked, sounded and behaved like one—young, clean, handsome, untainted by the freneticism of the time. He had arrived out of nowhere without fanfare and he had taken off without fuss. He had stayed aloft and been unaffected by the shoddy carnival swirling around him during his stay in New York, and had simply ignored the skeptics and scoffers who called him a Flying Fool and said he would never make it. Maybe he wouldn't. But there was something so confidently godlike in his demeanor that to some religiously minded Americans it was almost as if he were a messsenger of them, carrying the word. To others he was a rebel against the shabbiness, cynicism, cheapness and injustice of their flashy world, challenging the system by which they lived.

The more experts swore he would kill himself, the more their dreams rode with him. And from the moment the Spirit of St. Louis took off from the mud of a Long Island airfield into the misted sea, he became a symbol of their own hopes and ambitions, a bright light in a murky world.

"To millions of simple people," Mosley concludes, accurately, "he was no longer flying for himself but for humanity: he was not simply flying to Paris, but blazing the trail to a better life. If he failed, they would sigh softly and realize that their hopes for him had been too good to be true. But if he made it, a halo would not be too much for him."

That halo, of course, was to become a crown of thorns and Lindbergh's subsequent espousal of the strength of the fast-building military power of Hitlerism, vastly inflated by the calculating architects of the Nazi movement so that Lindbergh became a valuable, if unwitting, tool of propaganda in Europe and America, now seems an uncharacteristic development.

Yet it must be remembered that his doctrine of non-involvement was shared by a majority of Americans. Mosley's evidence makes it clear that Lindbergh's admiration and awe for the Nazi air and land weapons was rooted in his own hostility for socialism and the USSR and by his belief that Germany was invincible. His four trips to Germany between 1936 and 1938, at a time when he was in voluntary exile in England, including the visit in which he was decorated by Field Marshal Herman Goering with the Service Cross, the German Eagle (which he never returned), grew into an impassioned crusade to keep the United States out of a "European" war.

It was a crusade that was to lead him to the ultimate lunacy of an apology for the Nazi "solution" to the Jewish "problem" and to cast a long shadow, perhaps forever, on his stature as a legitimate hero.

True, when war came at last to the United States, he volunteered his services and certainly the kidnapping of the Lindbergh baby and his subsequent devotion to the causes of world ecology, were factors in earning him public sympathy, yet he was never to fully overcome his curious alliance with Hitler's global madness.

Mosley, an Englishman, reveals the kind of love-hate relationship that, perhaps more than any public figure of this age, still lingers in the public mind. That he was a complete and courageous individualist, so evident in the stoic way he met death in the Hawaiian retreat he shared with Anne, emerges as the one valuable clue to the riddle of his life.

Love, Houseplants and an Apple Tree

I don't know if David McFadden will ever win a Governor-General's Award, but I think it would be good if he did. Too often, that award (and the accompanying $2,500) has gone to some time-worn old favorite, or a member of the hip elite, and I have the feeling the McFadden is really neither of these, which in itself would be a refreshing twist.

Until now, McFadden has been pretty much what his editors and reviewers have said. He's been "crazy as a bedbug" — "an eccentric" — "a super-realist" — and, if I can add my own two cents, I'd say he's come close to being cute and useless on occasion, but he's recouped, and what you have in this book is something different and rather new for Canada.

McFadden makes contact here as nowhere else. His whole disposition brings to mind two American poets, Frank O'Hara and Douglas Blazek — it is the feeling of a person wonderfully, magically alive as he goes about his normal, everyday life. O'Hara used to write warmly and endearingly about his lunch hour. Blazek broke your heart when he told you about his living room couch. Here, McFadden would love more than to tell you that the whole book is like this, but the truth is it's not.

Perhaps it's sheer crazy to ask a Canadian poet, beset by eight months bad weather every year, to deliver something technically sound and emotionally up-tempo from cover to cover. Perhaps it just can't be done. A Knight In Dried Plums often harks back to an earlier McFadden, peddling trick endings and a private poetic that seldom connects. Shades of Coach House Press, etc.

But McFadden, now in his mid-thirties, is still developing and, judging by what he's shown in a dozen or so poems in this book, I'm more eager to hear from him in the future than perhaps any other Canadian poet.

A Summer List

Before I stick my neck out, let me express my gratitude for one thing. I am glad I am not a giraffe.

Though I have talked or corresponded with four children's librarians, two reference librarians, and one educator who is a specialist in children's reading, I know many will disagree with what I am about to write.

They will think I have left out the very books I should have included — their own favorites. They will also question (as I do myself) my age and grade groupings. But this is meant to be only a starter and a stimulus.

What I propose to do, in this article, is to suggest what books a child should have read by a certain age or by a certain grade in school. These are books that, if they are missed, will leave a gap. Something will have been lost in transition.

It is a kind of checklist for teachers and, even more, for parents. They can find out whether their child has read these books and, if the child has not, suggest they be given a try. Maybe the child will like them; maybe not. But most children do, and that is why so many of these books are considered classics.

First I would like to mention some (by no means all) of the books that should have been read, or read to, a pre-school child or, as the child's reading skill progresses, by a child up to age 9 or 10 and perhaps in third grade. Here they are, with a few comments on each.

1. For the youngest, preschool, and a bit beyond:

"Goodnight Moon," by Margaret Wise Brown. A book to be read at bedtime, telling of a bunny who bids goodnight to the things in his room.

"Mother Goose." There are many collections of these timeless rhymes, with various illustrations, along with books of similar nursery rhymes.

"The Tale of Peter Rabbit," by Beatrix Potter. This has been a classic since it appeared in 1901.

"Make Way for Ducklings," by Robert McCloskey. A book that can be read to a small child and then read by the same child several years after, with new enjoyment of the story and the art work.

"The Story of Babar, the Little Elephant," by Jean de Brunhoff. The several books about Babar, the French elephant, written and illustrated by de Brunhoff, are longtime favorites.

"Johnny Crow's Garden," with illustrations by Leslie

Brooke. Nonsense rhymes that are fun.

"Millions of Cats," by Wanda Gag. An unusual story of an old man who tries to find a cat for company and eventually is overrun by millions of them.

"Where the Wild Things Are," by Maurice Sendak. Full of imaginative dreams. Its illustrations by the author might give nightmares to an adult but not, oddly, to a child.

2. With some overlapping with the first group, for ages 6 to 10, roughly up to third grade:

"Winnie-the-Pooh," by A. A. Milne. Also "The House at Pooh Corner" and other Milne books.

"The Adventures of Pinocchio," by Carlo Collodi. An everlasting favorite, translated from the Italian, about an adventurous wooden puppet who becomes a boy.

"The Story of Ferdinand," by Munro Leaf. About a very special bull who liked to smell flowers, and what happened because of this.

"Madeline," by Ludwig Bemelmans. One of several modern classics about a little girl in a Paris boarding school.

"And to Think That I Saw It on Mulberry Street" and "The 500 Hats of Bartholomew Cubbins," by Dr. Seuss. Two of the earlier Dr. Seuss books and I think the best. Full of humor, absurdity, and those inimitable Dr. Seuss drawings.

"The Snowy Day," by Ezra Jack Keats. A warm, simple story about a city boy and his enjoyment of playing in the snow.

"Charlotte's Web" and "Stuart Little," by E. B. White. Two fanciful and memorable stories by a highly skilled writer.

"Mr. Popper's Penguins," by Richard T. and Florence H. Atwater. A humorous narrative about a house painter and his penguins from the Antarctic.

I have started with books for preschoolers who might have to be read to and moved up to the nine- or ten-year-olds in the third grade. There is much variation in reading skill and in interests, and my classification is meant to be flexible.

Now I come to a period in the reading life of young people which is even more indefinite or indefinable. By the end of this second period, a period which is from about age 10 to age 13, or from about third grade to sixth, there is more individuality and overlapping than ever.

By age 13, considerable maturing has taken place, and I hesitate to be specific about what all young (but many no longer think themselves to be young) readers should read.

So it is with even more trepidation than before that I suggest the books one can hope young people have read by the time they are 13 and are in the sixth or seventh grade.

Once again, parents can ask their children, "Have you read these books?" But once again, and even more than with the younger children, they should not press these books upon them. Suggest, yes. Demand, no. This becomes more true with each year of maturation.

Here are the books:

"Aesop's Fables." These fables, probably not all actually written by Aesop, hold the reader's interest with the story and lead up to a moral that is as applicable today as it was in ancient Greece.

"The Emperor's New Clothes," by Hans Christian Andersen, Or "The Ugly Duckling" or "The Little Match Girl" or almost any of Andersen's 160 fairy tales. Many of these might be enjoyed for their story by the earlier reading group, but the allegories and morals, like those in "Aesop's Fables," have more impact with slightly older readers.

"The Lion, the Witch, and the Wardrobe," by C. S. Lewis. A tale of fantasy about a noble land that frees a magical land from the spell of the White Witch.

"The Wind in the Willows," by Kenneth Grahame. Another fantasy, this one about Mr. Toad and his animal friends. A classic for sure.

"The Hobbit," by John R. R. Tolkien. A story of adventure in a far-off land that appeals to old as well as young. A book for all ages or, as Tolkien fans would say, "a book for the ages."

"Alice's Adventures in Wonderland" and "Through the Looking Glass," by Lewis Carroll.

"Little House in the Big Woods," by Laura Ingalls Wilder. Also her many other books of log-cabin life in Wisconsin. Close-to-the-soil Americana.

"The Secret Garden," by Frances Hodgson Burnett. A touching story of children and a garden with special powers.

"Tom Sawyer" and "Huckleberry Finn," by Mark Twain. The first is a little easier; the second can be read at a fairly early age and then read later for what was missed the first time.

"Little Women," by Louisa May Alcott. A family story.

"Complete Nonsense Book," by Edward Lear. Full of absurdities. There is a time to laugh, and the sense of humor, like the imagination, is strong in young people.

"The Jungle Book" and "Just So Stories," by Rudyard Kipling.

"The Phantom Tollbooth," by Norman Juster. A fantasy that is a favorite of mine because of its loving play with words.

The list could go on and on.

Richard Armour picks the best of books for children as suggested reading program

"Black Beauty," "Heidi," "Peter Pan," "Robinson Crusoe," "The Arabian Nights," "Treasure Island," "Hans Brinker," "The Wizard of Oz," "Swiss Family Robinson" . . .

I have emphasized books that have been established as classics or near-classics, which means I have omitted many recent books that are likely to reach the classic category.

I have in mind books by such writers as Beverly Cleary, E. B. Konigsburg, Scott O'Dell, Marguerite Henry, Madeleine L'Engle, Eleanor Estes, and many another.

It is difficult to be selective when one gets to the reader who can read almost anything, as an intelligent, well-taught 13-year-old can. By that age the young reader should have read enough to be aware, consciously or subconsciously, of the writer's style, and to catch literary allusions.

The reader's special interests will have emerged: in science fiction, mystery stories, biography, the animal kingdom, or whatever. In fact the reader may be ready for adult novels, drama, and poetry.

The young reader will be all the more ready, as well as stocked with memorable words and thoughts and characters and scenes, if he or she has read some, if not all, of the books I (with thanks to the children's librarians who have advised me) have listed above. These are just a few. For more, I refer the parent (teachers would already know about them) to such reference works as "Best Books for Children" and "Growing Up with Books." The problem — and this is what led to my uncertainty at the outset — is that children vary greatly in their reading ability at any particular age or in their grade at school, and they also vary greatly in what interests them.

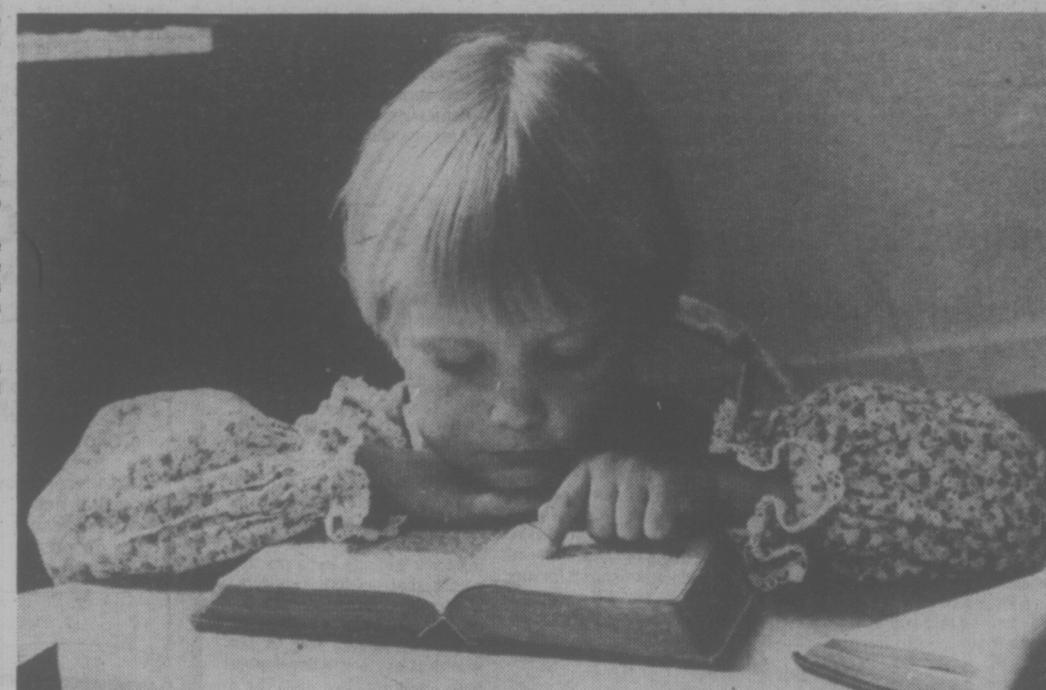

Most, but not all, I have discovered, like animals, fantasy and humor.

My one caution, repeated, is not to thrust books on children, not to say, "You must read this," but rather "I think you would like this. Freedom and guidance should be intermingled."

The main thing is to keep the young reader reading — an enjoyment. So much the better; however, if the books read are of lasting value, books that will be remembered and perhaps reread at a later time with new insights.

Have you missed some of these books yourself? You might still enjoy them.
